Compromise Bloc Moves for Court Plan Defeat

WHEELER CHARGES 'DESPERATE' ACTS TO BILL'S BACKERS

Montana Democrat Bitterly Assails Farley for Remarks About Senators Who Have Advocated for Compromise.

COPELAND SEES DEFEAT FOR BILL

Norris To Introduce Bill for 'Multiplication' of TVA Into 7 Additional Flood Control Projects.

WASHINGTON, May 15.—(UP) President Roosevelt's adamant opposition to modification of his judiciary program suffered a new blow tonight when Senator McCarran, Nevada, Democrat, said the congressional compromise bloc might switch their strategy and go out to "lick" the administration bill.

McCarran issued a sharply worded statement saying that the compromise advocates—who admittedly hold the balance of power in the court fight—"will now be inclined to withdraw our proposals and bring the issue to a straight-out vote."

"And we've got it licked," the Nevada senator added.

His statement came after Senator Wheeler, Montana, Democrat, leader of the fight against the court bill, had charged the administration with "desperate and threatening" tactics in seeking to press the bill to enactment without compromise.

Wheeler particularly assailed Postmaster General Farley for remarks he made concerning senators who have advocated a compromise, mentioning McCarran and Senator O'Mahoney, Wyoming Democrat.

Copeland, Democrat, New York, a foe of the court plan, predicted in a prepared statement that it's "defeat is inevitable." He said "There will be no compromise on our side."

"Compromise is a double-edged sword," he said. "This is a matter of principle with so large a group of senators that it is impossible for the plan to be approved."

"I'm not answerable to Jim Farley for my conscience, thank God! Right now my conscience is perfectly clear.

"I don't say this to be disagreeable, but all of us who are interested in the progress of events in Washington know the bill isn't going to pass while 40 to 50 men in the senate are against it."

McCarran's remarks were considered particularly significant because of the attention given his compromise proposal for increase of the court to 11 members and because he had been the key man in the agitation for compromise.

Court Fight Dominant.

The controversy over enlargement of the court continued to dominate the congressional picture into which the President yesterday injected suggestions for labor,

Lower Taxicab Rates Are Put Into Effect

Cheaper taxicab rates went into effect in Atlanta last night.

The new rate is four miles for 30 cents, instead of two miles for the initial charge. Additional half miles are 10 cents each in the new rate as in the old, A. L. Belle Isle, president of the taxicab company, announced. The charges were fixed recently by city council.

Belle Isle said a 25-cent extra service charge is to be made for trips outside the city limits, temporarily at least. Extra charges were made under the old rate to Decatur and other suburban towns.

First Lady Urges Safety Driving Entry

Just to find out for herself what the tests to be given in The Constitution-sponsored Women's Safety Driving Contest are really like, Mrs. E. D. Rivers, wife of Georgia's governor, yesterday took them herself. M. D. Thomas, of the Atlanta police department, one of the officers who will serve as official scorers for the contest, is shown giving the Governor's wife instructions. Mrs. Rivers, an ex-school teacher, praised the educational aspects of the tests and urged all women to enter the contest for this reason alone.

BROOKS AND COOK SEEKING AWARDS

Counties Make Aggressive Plans To Capture Prize From Constitution

By HERMAN HANCOCK.

Half a score of additional Georgia counties yesterday were laying definite plans to enlist actively in The Atlanta Constitution's Progressive Government Awards as the total number already actively affiliated with the drive to bring maximum benefits of county government to citizens neared 100.

Activities in various sections of the state in brief are:

1. Cook county, led by D. McPhaul, commission chairman, and members of the Cook County Commercial Club, of which T. D. Juhan is president, laid plans for a comprehensive program, which will be announced within the next few days.

Bulloch Determined.

2. Bulloch county, inspired by the Kiwanis Club, will hold a meeting Tuesday to which commissioners and other officials have been invited with a view of definitely placing Bulloch's bid for the $3,500 first award.

3. Franklin county will launch its ambitious drive for the first award at the opening on Saturday, June 12, of the Franklin County Club Market and Handwork Exchange, according to advices from Rush Burton, veteran editor of the Lavonia Times.

4. John H. Moore, chairman of the Lumpkin county commission, has called a meeting of that group June 14 at Dahlonega for the purpose of definitely aligning the county with the progressive movement.

5. Editor R. P. Ottwell, of the Forsyth County News, and T. F. Davis, ordinary and county com-

Preliminaries in Prize Contest Will Begin for Women Wednesday.

Three more days of practice remain before Atlanta's feminine automobile operators begin preliminary tests in the city's first women's safety driving contest, sponsored by The Constitution in co-operation with Sears Service station, the metropolitan area Ford dealers and various other local business houses.

Awaiting the woman driver adjudged the best in the city by expert police instructor-testers is a free week's stay for two persons at the Ocean-Forest hotel at Myrtle Beach, S. C., and $100 in cash. Various other awards await the finalists and semi-finalists.

Mrs. Rivers Lauds Tests.

Mrs. E. D. Rivers, wife of the Governor, after having the tests explained to her by one of the official scorers, declared, "These tests will provide each contestant a liberal education in traffic regulations and safe driving. It will prove, I am sure, beneficial to every woman who enters the contest. I would urge women to take the instructions for the training alone and without thought of prizes."

The board of directors of the Atlanta Motor Club adopted resolutions at its meeting last week commending The Constitution and the various co-operating Atlanta firms for providing such a unique driving instruction contest.

Preliminary tests begin Wednesday and continue through Friday, May 28. Fifty semi-finalists will compete Saturday afternoon, May 29, at the Sears parking lot, just off Ponce de Leon avenue. Ten finalists will vie for the grand awards Sunday afternoon, May 30, at the same location.

Test Depots Selected.

Test depots have been designated as Sears Service station, and all Ford stations in the metropolitan area and Roswell. Expert police drivers will be on duty daily, except Sunday, during this period, between the hours of 10 o'clock

Gentleman Jockey Drowns at Sea When Storm Sweeps New England

BOSTON, May 15.—(AP)—A two-day rainstorm blew out to sea tonight after destroying life and property off shore and sending New England streams toward flood crests.

Clearing skies quieted flood fears in Massachusetts, Vermont and New Hampshire as rain-drenched mountain slopes drained into the Connecticut, Merrimack, Housatonic, Winooski and tributary rivers.

Albert Graham Ober Jr., member of a prominent Baltimore family, and gentleman jockey, was pitched into the sea and lost 10 miles off Block Island, R. I., when the yacht Flying Cloud, of Baltimore, lurched as it plowed into a heavy sea.

Donald K. Sherwood, owner of the craft, reported the accident when the yacht made Newport, R. I., on its trip from Fairhaven, Mass., to Gibson's Island, N. Y.

Ober was leaning over the upper deck tending to the lee back stay when a sudden lurch of the craft pitched him overboard, Sherwood said.

The three-masted Canadian schooner Minas King, which went aground near Quoddy Head, Maine, last night, was towed to state anchorage in the near-by Johnson's Bay late today by the coast guard patrol boat AD-58 and a commercial vessel. The coast guard reported the boat was leaking.

Many New England streams were still over their banks tonight but damage by flood waters was believed slight.

About 100 homes in Keene, N. H., were cut off from electric power. Officials there reported 3.11 inches of rain had fallen in 32 hours.

The Connecticut river was rising at the rate of two inches an hour.

RIVERS SAYS G.O.P., TALMADGE LINKED TO BALK PROGRAM

SPEAKER CHEERED BY STATE SOLONS

Present Plan Is Called Only One Offered In Generation To Aid Poor Residents of Georgia.

Declaring that the constitutional amendments to be voted on June 8 comprise the only concrete program to help the poor people of Georgia offered in a generation, Governor Rivers last night charged that the phraseology of a Republican resolution adopted by the G. O. P. state executive committee here yesterday is so "exactly similar in wording to language used in a certain political publication" that the people of Georgia know who its author was. Rivers left no doubt in the minds of his hearers but that he was referring to Talmadge and Talmadge's newspaper, the Statesman.

The session, attended by more than 80 per cent of the members of the house and senate broke into an uproar, halting the Governor's address for several minutes with its applause.

"I have just been handed a copy of these resolutions passed by the Republican committee behind closed doors," the Governor shouted. "We have at last smoked them out into the open. The same renegade Democrats who tried to fool the people of Georgia last year, the Liberty Leaguers, the Grass Rooters and all of them are to-

IMPORTANT ISSUES FACE ELECTORATE

Purposes of 26 Amendments To Be Voted on June 8 Are Explained.

By L. A. FARRELL.

Although there are 26 constitutional amendments to be voted on in the June 8 general election, only six of these involve Governor Rivers' program for reorganization and bear the stamp of approval of the Democratic party of Georgia. There has not been and is not expected to be much discussion over the remaining 20 and their adoption is said to be a foregone conclusion.

Except for the opposition stirred up by former Governor Talmadge and his associates there has been no organized fight on the Rivers' program, while the present governor and his organization, as well as the state democratic executive committee, have perfected a state-wide organization through which it is hoped to roll up as great a majority for the contested amendments as those given the measures on which there are no fight.

The proposal for repeal of Georgia's bone-dry law also is on the long ballot but this is not a constitutional amendment. The Rivers administration, following the leadership of the Governor,

NEW COURT ACTION SEEN IN VOTE WAR

Attorney for Election Foes Announces Move as 3d Test Is Defeated.

By JOSH P. SKINNER.

DOUGLAS, Ga., May 15.—(AP)—Supersedeas action was in prospect tonight as another step in litigation to prevent holding of the June 8 election on 26 proposed constitutional amendments.

Attorney R. A. Moore announced the plan after Superior Judge M. D. Dickerson dismissed a petition for a Coffee county injunction today, which made the count three up and three down against the pleas.

Held General Election.

Judge Dickerson acted upon the same grounds that Danielsville and Marietta judges had used in arriving at similar decisions. He said it was "a general election."

"In my opinion," the judge said, "the constitution specifically delegates to the general assembly the power to call and fix dates of general elections."

Announcing he intended to appeal, Moore said he would ask a supercedeas to keep monies for holding the election from being paid out until the supreme court passed upon the case.

Forty-two Coffee county taxpayers brought the petition here to restrain county officials from Duke To Get $150,000 From Royal Family, Friends Declare.

LONDON, May 15.—(AP)—Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin was believed in authoritative quarters tonight to have taken his renewed difficulties with British royalty to the premiers of the dominions.

As the square-jawed head of the cabinet retired to Chequers, his official country house, for the long Whitsuntide week end, accompanied by some of the diminions leaders, two outstanding problems on his mind were empire economics and Wallis Warfield.

Close observers considered Baldwin leader of the government element which would prevent the bride-to-be of the Duke of Windsor from becoming "her royal highness" when she becomes a duchess, probably early in June.

The former King Edward VIII, who opposed Baldwin in the crisis of last December, once more is opposing him by insisting that his wife shall enjoy a royal title.

This controversy, like the December crisis until it neared the climax, is being kept from public knowledge.

REPORT SAYS DUKE TO GET $150,000 A YEAR

LONDON, May 15.—(UP)—The Duke of Windsor has been given a financial settlement which will give him and his intended bride, Mrs. Wallis Warfield, a truly royal income for life, reliable sources close to Buckingham palace revealed tonight.

BATTLE EXPECTED IN COUNCIL PARLEY

Controversial Proposals Are Slated for Hearing at Session Tomorrow.

Important financial matters are expected to be enacted by city council tomorrow, with partial salary restorations for non-school city employes proposed, but bitter battles are predicted on several issues to be considered.

Among the matters to be voted upon are:

1. Restoration of full basic pay as of May 1 to non-school employes making $100 per month or less and 5 per cent as of July 1 to workers drawing $101 or more. This action, favored by the finance committee, will be considered with the finance sheet recommending expenditures of new city revenue.

2. Allocation of $163,000 to the school department to be added to the $90,000 already allocated, making a total of $253,000 for the schools as their 30 per cent share of new revenue as required by law. The board of education is expected to hold a special meeting to partially restore salaries of school employes, probably as of May 1.

3. Council will hear the results of a special three-judge

Jungle Crash Victim Listed Dead of Despair

CARACAS, Venezuela, May 15. (AP)—A priest-survivor of a plane crash in the Venezuelan jungle today reported Frederic D. Grab, a fellow passenger and United States' government official died of "despair" while awaiting rescue.

A government mail plane crashed near the Brazilian frontier April 23 with a pilot, co-pilot and six passengers.

The co-pilot and two passengers fought their way out of the jungle a week after the crash. A Venezuelan frontier inspector found the wreck on May 9 with the remaining survivors except Grab.

A rescue party brought out the survivors, two of them, William Armstrong Perry, a writer and geologist, of Westport, Conn., and a priest, Father Baltasar, arriving here today. The priest said:

"Grab did not have any external injuries but died of despair and hopelessness. Airplanes could be heard flying overhead from the third day after the crash."

New Madam Minister to Norway Receives 1st Lesson in Diplomacy

Mrs. J. Borden Harriman Takes Oath, Reveals U. S. 'Secret.'

WASHINGTON, May 15.—(AP)—Hardly five minutes after she had been sworn in today as minister to Norway, Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, New York and Washington society woman, received her first lesson in practical diplomacy.

At the expense of much discomforture on the part of a state department official, she learned that an initial rule for diplomats is to be noncommital.

Mrs. Harriman inadvertently disclosed to newsmen that the State Department is discussing with the Norwegian government the negotiation of a reciprocal trade treaty. This was something the correspondents were not supposed to know at this stage of the proceedings.

AERIAL RAID LASTS ABOUT 6 MINUTES

Basque Soldiers Report Recapture of Summit of Strategically Vital Mountain Near Bilbao.

VALENCIA, May 15.—(UP)—Thirty-two persons were killed and about 100 were injured tonight in a Rebel air raid in which the British embassy was struck by a bomb.

First reports indicated two members of the embassy staff were injured but later advices indicated the casualties may have been confined to Spaniards.

One member of the staff described the raid as "a nasty experience" but added, "thank goodness none of us was hurt." He was unable to state how many Spaniards were killed or wounded in the embassy building, the facade of which was badly damaged.

Other bombs destroyed a house which the Chilean ambassador had furnished for refugees from Madrid. Ten members of the resident staff, including a cook and a servant, were killed.

Although 130 Chileans are expected here from Madrid Monday, there were no refugees in the house at the time of the raid. Eighty Argentine refugees had arrived in the city Friday.

The populace was thrown into confusion when the raiders appeared. Pedestrians ran for shelter as searchlights sought out the planes and anti-aircraft batteries went into action.

A Rebel squadron flew over this temporary capital at 8 p. m., and the raid lasted five or six minutes.

Six Insurgent bombers were reported to be in the squadron, and three violent bomb explosions were counted.

This was the second incident within a week involving the British, the destroyer Hunter having been badly damaged, and eight of the crew killed by an explosion off Almeria several days ago.

WITNESS DESCRIBES HINDENBURG BLAST IN STERN OF SHIP

Rigging Officer Reveals That Landing Rope Was Fouled by Fins.

LAKEHURST, N. J., May 15.—(AP)—The investigators of the Hindenburg disaster unexpectedly discovered today a man who could tell them what he saw happen in the dirigible's stern when it was torn with a flaming explosion.

Considered one of the most important crew survivors yet found, Hans Freund, a rigging officer, told the commerce department investigating board and its staff of American and German advisers that he was on duty in the ship's tail at the time and near the spot where disaster struck so suddenly.

While today's brief hearing was in progress, the loss of life from the airliner tragedy of May 6 increased to 36. A German passenger, Otto Ernst, 78, a Hamburg cotton importer, died this morning at Paul Kimball hospital, in near-by Lakewood, from the burns and injuries he suffered in the crash.

Freund, in explaining the momentary fouling of the rope, said:

"The manila handling rope by which I pull up the steel cabling line (that was to be attached on the ground) had been caught by two fins. Lauer (a crew assistant) stepped up and cleared it where it had been caught."

Freund will be recalled Monday.

is remaining neutral on the repeal issue. It will make use of any funds provided by repeal but at the same time state officials have made it known they will find ways to get along if repeal is defeated.

Ballot Sent Out.

The ballot for the election, containing what is said to be a record number of constitutional amendments, was sent out last week by Downing Musgrove, executive secretary to Governor Rivers and Secretary of State John B. Wilson.

The Rivers program appears first on the ballot. The first two amendments are co-related inasmuch as they provide for assistance to the aged, the needy, the blind and the dependent children. Revision of two paragraphs is necessary to permit such assistance by the state. The first is Paragraph 1, Section 1, Article 7, and the second is Paragraph 2, Section 6, Article 7.

If the first amendment is voted the state will be permitted to levy taxes for the payment of such assistance while it is necessary to amend in the second instance in order that the counties may make such levies to permit their participation in the social security program. Only a ver small portion of the costs of the social security program are to be borne by the counties but even at that it is necessary for the amendment to be adopted before they can participate at all. The federal government and the state will share the greatest portion of the burden.

Tax Exemption Amendment.

The third amendment on the ballot is that providing that the general assembly in its wisdom may enact legislation exempting owner-occupied homes and farms up to $2,500 from state, county and school district taxes. The Democratic state convention at Macon last year called for an out and out exemption on homesteads but the assembly did not carry this out to the full letter of the platform.

The amendment is specific in that it does not exempt these homesteads from municipal taxes nor from such taxes as are now being levied to pay off bonded indebtedness of the counties and school districts.

Should this amendment be ratified by the voters it is known that Governor Rivers, an arch supporter of the exemption program, will include the exemption enabling legislation in his call for a special session of the general assembly he plans to summon late this year.

Only Owner-Occupied.

The amendment provides that the exemptions shall be in force and effect only on those homes and farms occupied by their owners. Houses and farms owned by individuals or corporations and rented out are not included in the provision. If a home or farm is of $2,000 valuation or less there will be no state, county and school district ad valorem taxes thereon. If it is of more than $2,000 valuation the $2,000 will be deducted from the assessed valuation and the balance of the property will be taxed according to existing levies.

The next exemption provides for an out and out exemption of household and kitchen furniture and yard stock up to $300. In other words, if a citizen owns only $300 worth of such property there will be no ad valorem tax at all on it. If he owns more than $300 the $300 will be deducted just like the $2,000 will be deducted on his home or farm and he will be taxed on the balance.

Taxing authorities say there is only a small minority of people in Georgia paying on more than $300 worth of personal effects.

In advocating adoption of the homestead exemption and personal property exemption amendments, Governor Rivers has declared this is his administration's first move to take off taxes from those whose burden has been and will be increased as a result of the social security program and the general widening of services by new and old state governmental agencies.

Classification Proposal.

The fifth amendment is the provision permitting the general assembly to classify property for taxation.

This amendment admittedly is designed to permit the assembly to reclassify property, dividing tangibles and intangibles into two classes in an effort to increase the yield from intangible properties. Efforts have been made before to get at the intangibles by reclassification but in other instances the amendment carrying the provision has been complicated and as a result defeated.

The present amendment is perhaps the simplest and the shortest ever introduced. It merely gives the assembly authority to enact such a classification.

Although Governor Rivers has campaigned in support of this amendment on the theory that it will enable the state, the counties and the cities to levy on intangibles which are not now returned, there has been no effort made to defeat it. Four years ago when the last intangible amendment was submitted it was defeated after a strong organization had been set up against it.

Willing to Pay Share.

Observers say now that business interests and the holders of intangible properties will support the amendment because they feel certain the intangibles will be taxed fairly and they are willing to pay a fair share. As it is now intangibles and real property are taxed alike. Intangibles are earning far less than real property and holders of the intangibles make no secret of the fact that little such property is being returned for taxation.

The sixth amendment provides that the constitution shall be changed to permit the payment requirements of $30 per month to Confederate veterans and their widows shall be revised so that widows of veterans who married prior to 1920 come within the benefits of the program.

At present only those widows who married veterans prior to 1881 obtain the pension. All over Georgia there are widows said to be in need of the pension.

Supported by Rivers.

This amendment, while not a part of the Rivers campaign platform last summer nor included in the platform of the state democratic convention at Macon, has the warm support of the Governor and his administration.

The seventh amendment, and the last one involving the Rivers program, is that providing the general assembly, may convene itself in an emergency if and when three-fifths, or 60 per cent, of its members petition the governor for a session and he fails to act on their petition.

Two years ago the general assembly, for divers reasons, failed to pass a general appropriations act as it had done in previous regular sessions only to be called into special session for the purpose. The then governor, Eugene Talmadge, instead of calling a special session, essayed to run the state without an appropriation bill. He ousted Comptroller General William B. Harrison and State Treasurer George B. Hamilton when they refused to countersign and honor warrants on the treasury drawn by Talmadge.

Both Re-elected.

Both Harrison and Hamilton were overwhelming re-elected in the September primary. In his campaign last summer the governor promised if elected to sponsor a program where the general assembly could call itself together in such an emergency as that Talmadge refused to recognize late in 1935 and early in 1936.

The state democratic convention at Macon included in its platform a plank calling for the self-convening amendment and the general assembly submits it as a result of the wishes of the Governor and the democratic party.

Although former Governor Talmadge has centered his attacks on the amendments involving social security legislation, he also has announced his opposition to this amendment, while Governor Rivers and his administration are vigorously supporting it.

So much for the Rivers program. The balance of the amendments for the most part involve only certain localities, but there appears to be a general interest in them all over the state.

Eighth and Ninth.

The eighth and ninth amendments on the ballot have brought about no controversy. They are purely technical, providing minor revisions in court procedure. The eighth involves only the supreme court and the ninth involves the courts of ordinary, the municipal courts and the police courts.

The tenth amendment provides for the levying of taxes by counties to pay the salaries of county agricultural and home demonstration agents. These salaries are now paid either by the federal government, the school board of the state and in a few instances by the board of regents of the University system. Some counties desire to pay more and obtain better agents than the present system will afford.

Georgia has lost a number of widely-known agents and home demonstration leaders in the last few years because the counties were unable to meet the salaries paid by the federal govrnment and private enterprises. It is in an effort to stop this outflow of agents that the amendment is being submitted.

Local Amendments.

The next group of amendments involve only one county each. The 11th permits the city of Swainsboro to issue refunding bonds, make temporary loans and to retire the current deficit. The next applies only to Richmond county, giving that county the authority to make temporary loans. This amendment was submitted in 1935 but Governor Talmadge refused to put it on the ballot.

The next amendment, the 13th, pertains only to DeKalb county and is designed to permit the county to levy taxes outside the corporate limits of its cities for fire prevention purposes. This is the Druid Hills fire department amendment. It also includes the right of the county to levy taxes for sanitation, sewer and water.

The 13th amendment on the ballot is that providing that Fulton county shall be a separate senatorial district. It is the same amendment put through the assembly in 1935 but vetoed by Governor Talmadge. Fulton county re-elected its senator, G. Everett Millican, last year, although Clayton county entered a candidate in the field. The amendment revises the senatorial districts so that Fulton will always have its representative in the upper branch of the assembly, while Clayton county will have its share of senators like the balance of the two-unit vote counties of the state.

The 15th amendment pertains only to Chatham county (Savannah), giving that county the right to set up a retirement fund for its county employes.

Zoning Amendment.

The 16th amendment is one of state-wide importance as it pertains to zoning by all counties and bl all cities of more than 1,000 population. There are other amendments relating to zoning and planning laws in various cities but this amendment would obviate the necessity for their passage as it cares for them all in one paragraph.

The 17th, 18th, 19th and 20th amendments provide for zoning and planning in Glynn county and the cities of Dalton, Quitman, Forsyth, Cordele, Carrollton, Milledgeville, Eastman, Fort Valley and McRae. Glynn county and the cities of Dalton and Quitman are in separate amendments. The others are grouped in one amendment, the 20th.

To Fulton Alone.

The 21st amendment applies only to Fulton county and would permit the increase in the county-wide school levy from 1 mill as at present to 1 1-2 mills. The amendment reads that it applies only in those counties containing cities of more than 200,000 population. Atlanta is the only city in the state of 200,000 or more population.

The 22d amendment likewise pertains only to the city of Atlanta and gives this city the authority to make temporary loans, to issue refunding bonds and to retire its present deficit.

The 23d amendment permits the city of Albany to increase its bonded indebtedness for the purpose of constructing a waterworks while the next one permits the city of Dublin to issue refunding bonds.

The 25th and 26th amendments give the county of Ware and its seat, the city of Waycross, the right to carry on its campaign for new industries. They permit the county and ctiy to levy taxes and appropriate money for the securing of industries.

Repeal Proposal.

Attached to the ballot is the proposal for repeal of Georgia's bone-dry law. This is not a constitutional amendment.

Also attached is the nomination of John C. Mitchell, of Dalton, as candidate of the Democratic party for the judgship of the Cherokee circuit to fill out the term for which Judge Claude C. Pittman is now sitting. Judge Pittman has refused to recognize the validity of the election in so far as his office is concerned. Inasmuch as Mr. Mitchell is unopposed his election is assured and another court fight over the judgeship is in prospect immediately after the certification of the result by Secretary of State Wilson.

Exclusive Cat Likes Exclusive Auto Ride

Miss Jean Parham assists Felix, her four-month-old kitten, to the top of the family car, where he chooses to ride rather than in the car with his owners.

Kitten Finds Utmost Feline Bliss Riding on Roof Owners' Sedan

Felix, Four-Month-Old White Cat, Enjoys High Perch on Speeding Car as Well as Running on Keyboard of Piano.

BY YOLANDE GWIN.

Felix, a 4-month-old cat, rides on the top of an automobile, but what is danger when you are a cat and have nine lives to give for pleasure?

The tiny pet of Jean Parham, of 1100 La Rosa terrace, chose the top of the family automobile for his special seat and when the car is brought out of the garage Felix is the first to get his place. His actions are always the same. He stands on his hind legs, washes his face with his two front paws, and then, with a loud "Meow," he announces in his best feline manner he is ready to ride.

The first time he rode on the car roof it was unknown to Mrs. G. W. Parham, who was driving. She paid no heed to the yells and screams of the neighborhood children. When she finally awoke to the fact the excitement was directed at her she began to investigate. Then she found Felix, relaxed on the top of the car, apparently enjoying his simultaneous sun bath and ride.

He jumps on top of the car all the time and is always ready to ride, according to his owners. They have to keep a watchful eye on the kitten, for he plays on the piano when at home, running up and down the keyboard.

But he would rather ride. If you see a shiny black car with a white kitten on top, it will be Felix enjoying his favorite outdoor sport.

VISCOUNT SNOWDEN PASSES IN LONDON

Heart Attack Is Fatal to Ex-Chancellor of the Exchequer.

LONDON, May 15.—(AP)—Philip Snowden, a weaver's son who became Viscount Snowden of Ichornshaw and labor's first Chancellor of the Exchequer, died today of a heart attack. He was 72 years old and had been inactive in politics for five years.

His wife—who once said she fell in love with him "when I saw him smile"—was his only immediate survivor.

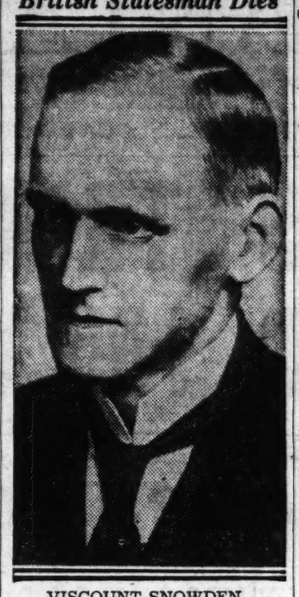

Viscount Snowden had struggled in recent years with increasing pain and illness. He had been crippled since he was 27, when he was knocked from a bicycle.

The body will be cremated at a private service Tuesday at Woking, Surrey.

King George and Queen Elizabeth sent messages of condolence to Viscountess Snowden, and Ramsay MacDonald, former Prime Minister who made Snowden his Chancellor of the Exchequer, forgot the differences he had had with him in saying: "A great man of our age has passed by." The two disagreed violently over repeal of the land tax; Viscount Snowden wanted the tax continued.

Always a pacifist, he bitterly fought Britain's participation in the World War. He was an Atheist and a believer in Marxian socialism.

SOUTH'S PUBLISHERS WILL MEET MONDAY

Southern-Made Newsprint Predicted by 1938 by S. N. P. A. Head.

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., May 15.—(AP)—A prediction that southern-made newsprint would be available to newspapers in 1938 came today from James E. Chappell, president of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association, as publishers and other newspaper executives from every section of the south moved on Hot Springs for the association's 35th annual convention.

The convention formally opens Monday, continuing through Wednesday. Scheduled discussion of proposed establishment of newsprint manufacturing plants in the south was expected to draw a record attendance. Such plants are now largely concentrated in the northern United States and in Canada.

He paid tribute to the long service of Cranston Williams, Chattanooga, Tenn., secretary-manager of the association, who established convention headquarters at the Arlington hotel today.

The newsprint question will be brought before the convention Monday in a report from James G. Stahlman, publisher of the Nashville, Tenn., Banner, chairman of the Southern Newsprint Manufacture Committee, and recently elected president of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association.

hearing tomorrow morning in Fulton superior court on Fireman Frank G. McElroy's mandamus suit to force the city to pay full basic salaries to all city firemen as set out in a referendum voted in 1925.

4. Alderman Robert Carpenter, of the third ward, is expected to launch another fight to restore full basic pay to all city employes.

5. Resolution to earmark about $3,000 of the $20,000 given monthly to the Fulton Department of Public Welfare, to the support of private charities, will be considered.

6. A resolution to allocate $14,500, or a part of it, for the purchase of a 1,500-gallon pumper from the Peter Pirsch Company will be introduced, in all probability. The purchasing committee accepted the $11,700 bid of this company but the board of firemasters repudiated it. The finance committee failed to set up this sum in the new finance sheet last week.

Battles Impend.

Battles over pay for city employes, the earmarking of part of the public welfare funds for private charities and purchase of fire department equipment are expected to feature the meeting of council tomorrow afternoon. Sharp divisions on the three issues have been noted among councilmen.

Passage of the new finance sheet almost as favored by the finance committee at its meeting Wednesday was freely predicted yesterday.

The committee recommended the allocation of $831,000 revenue but left out the $14,500 for fire-fighting equipment. The new revenue comes from increased ad valorem, water and sanitary taxes. The one mill to be considered is earmarked by the legislature for retirement of the deficit, and council will automatically allocate $300,000 for this purpose if the sheet is adopted. The other one mill tax increase has already been allocated for relief.

Other expenditures recommended include funds for new police cars and motorcycles, new sanitary trucks and equipment, supplies and equipment for several departments, including Battle Hill sanitarium, and the motor transport department, fees for auditorium architects, $161,000 for the repair and replacement of water works equipment and for other deficiencies.

Postponement Possible.

Should the suit of Fireman McElroy be decided favorably to the fireman, it was considered likely council will postpone allocation of the new revenue.

If the money is allocated the school board will hold a special meeting this week, probably, to wipe out a part of the cuts of from 2 to 28 per cent under which school employes work. The board may vote to restore basic pay to workers making $100 or less per month and to impose only a straight 10 per cent cut on those making $101 or more per month.

Alderman Carpenter and Alderman G. Dan Bridges said yesterday they favor paying full basic salaries to firemen and to all city employes and both asserted they will ask City Attorney Jack Savage not to "defend" them in McElroy's suit. The fireman's petition is directed against the mayor and general council. Bridges and Carpenter said "basic salaries should be restored as of June 1." However, the fireman's suit is scheduled for hearing tomorrow morning and council is not expected tc take any action regarding it tomorrow afternoon. Savage and Assistant City Attorney Bond Almand have already filed answers and demurrers to McElroy's petition. The fireman is represented by Wellborn Ellis, law partner of Alderman Carpenter.

A number of proposals regarding traffic are to be introduced tomorrow.

Among them are ordinances to prohibit parking on Ivy street and on Edgewood avenue from Five Points to Piedmont avenue between the hours of 7 and 9 o'clock in the morning and 4 and 6 o'clock in the afternoon, and to prohibit angle parking anywhere in the city. Alderman Frank Reynolds said he would sponsor prohibition of angle parking but Councilman John A. White asserted he will reintroduce an ordinance to allow angle parking on Peachtree between Tenth and Eleventh streets and ask for a public hearing on it.

Alderman I. Gloer Hailey's proposal to force straight jail sentences for drunken drivers will be brought up again, although defeated in the ordinance committee three to one. Ordinances to ban blowing horns for curb service after midnight, to prohibit solicitation of votes on any election, and to require police investigation of applicants for hotel and boarding house licenses will be considered.

Request to the Georgia Power Company to substitute trackless tralleys for street cars on Peachtree street was favored by the streets committee and Councilman White, its author, predicted its passage in council. Requests for the State Highway Department to repave Piedmont avenue and for the county to resurface Boulevard are to be acted upon tomorrow also.

Alderman Roy Callaway's resolution asking county, state and federal aid in widening Whitehall street is also expected to receive the approval of council. It was unanimously adopted by the streets committee.

DIGNITY IS PLEDGED AT COUNCIL SESSIONS

Order and dignity are going to prevail in council meeting tomorrow, Alderman I. Gloer Hailey, mayor pro tem. and presiding officer of council, said yesterday.

Councilmen have been subjected to much jesting since the Atlanta League of Women Voters sent out a questionnaire asking councilmen why confusion reigned in council session and what to do to remedy it. Hailey said if it was within the power of the presiding officer to enforce order and dignity by requiring obedience to the rules, then council tomorrow will be orderly and dignified.

"I'll not be hard boiled, though," he said.

DAVIS IS PLEASED OVER SUGAR PARLEY

Ambassador-at-Large Returns From Europe.

NEW YORK, May 15.—(UP)—Norman H. Davis, United States ambassador-at-large, arrived from England on the liner Manhattan today, pleased with the international co-operation shown at the sugar conference which he attended, but pessimistic over the chances of such co-operation soon to an issue like disarmament.

Recalling that the still existent but dormant disarmament conference had been scheduled to reconvene June 6 but was postponed, Davis said such a meeting was "not in the picture now."

He added, however, "it is a good omen when 21 nations can sit down and discuss this question (sugar) as we did. You can't solve the political questions or any other without first getting the world's economics in a healthier condition."

JUNE 4 MARRIAGE SEEN FOR LOVERS

MONTS, France, May 15.—(UP) The marriage of the Duke of Windsor and Mrs. Wallis Warfield will take place on June 4, it was reported here tonight.

Herman L. Rogers, of New York, spokesman for Mrs. Simpson, said official announcement of the wedding plans will be made next Tuesday.

LEEDS ESTATE SOLD; EDWARD NOT BUYER

OYSTER BAY, N. Y., May 15. (AP)—The sale of the William B. Leeds' estate late today definitely set at rest rumors that the Duke of Windsor would be a bidder but left the purchaser of the 54-acre property somewhat of a mystery man.

Joseph B. Lerner, New York attorney, who made the top bid of $160,000 for magnificent "Kenwood," said he was not at liberty to disclose the purchaser for whom he acted but described him as "an American sportsman and yachtsman who is a member of a first family of Virginia."

This hint came after Lerner had answered a reporter's guess of James A. Farley with:

"Very, very close. But you'll have to wait until June 1 for an announcement."

BRANDEIS' FRIENDS DECLARE JUSTICE WILL NOT RETIRE

High Court May Rule on Unemployment Insurance Monday.

(Copyright, 1937, by United Press.)

WASHINGTON, May 15.—Supreme Court Justice Louis D. Brandeis, 80, it was learned tonight, has intimated to a group of close friends that he does not contemplate retirement from the bench at the present time.

The intimation was given, it was understood, in an effort to dispel suggestions circulated recently that he plans to quit the court at the conclusion of the present session.

Brandeis' office declined official comment on the retirement situation which came to a head as the court met today in one of its final Saturday conferences of the year. Before the court ends its work for the year it will hand down decisions on two vital phases of the social security act—the unemployment insurance and old age pensions provisions.

The unemployment decision may come Monday. Some court observers believed, however, that the unemployment decision and the old age pension verdict would come together, possibly at the court's final decision day of the year.

A new and important appeal was carried to the court today but action at this term was not expected. This was an appeal of the Electric Bond & Share Company test of the utilities holding company act. Argument of the case is not expected until next fall.

Stabbed in Heart Six Days Ago, Man Recovering

RALEIGH, N. C., May 15.—(UP)—John Schrieber, 37-year-old naturalized American who is miraculously recovering here from a half-inch knife wound in his heart, disclosed this was not the first time he has flirted with death.

The Raleigh metal worker was stabbed in the heart Sunday night during an alleged quarrel with William and Ferrel Choplin over his attentions to their sister, Mildred. The pocket knife entered six inches into his heart and snapped off.

The dying man was rushed to Rex hospital and 15 minutes after the stabbing a double row of stitches sewn in his faintly beating heart.

While engaged in fleet maneuvers off the Cuban coast in 1927, he leaped in the sea from the deck of the U. S. S. Richmond to save a fellow sailor, who had fallen overboard from being "just drunk."

The second rescue was several thousand miles distant from the first, but just as spectacular. While his ship was at anchor in the Hudson river, New York, Schrieber again dived overboard to save a man from "the East Side of New York" who was attacked by cramps. This occurred in 1935.

"I guess I am one of the best swimmers there is," Schrieber said, in a tone more confident than boastful.

GEORGIAN, COMPANION DROWN AT CLEVELAND

CLEVELAND, May 15.—(AP)—Two men were drowned early today when their automobile, which a witness said was traveling at a high rate of speed, careened down a hill near the downtown section and catapulted into 22 feet of water in the Cuycahoga river.

They were tentatively identified from papers in their pockets as Emerson Hill, of Cleveland, and James Hill, of Rome, Ga. James had a letter from his wife in Georgia.

John Gunderson, ferryboat operator, who saw the vehicle plunge into the river, notified police and coast guards. The street on which the men were driving ends abruptly.

POPE PIUS SUFFERS RELAPSE AT RESORT

Collins Renamed Superintendent Of State Game Farm in DeKalb

Governor Reappoints Popular Official Doing Good Work on Job.

By JACK TROY.

Governor Rivers announced yesterday the reappointment of Purser Collins superintendent of the state game farm, showplace of sportsmen in DeKalb county.

News of the reappointment will be hailed with delight by all persons interested in the propagation of game in the rather depleted fields of north Georgia.

Collins, who is an expert in the raising of quail, deer, chukar, wild turkey and other game, will carry on a work that has attracted national attention and already has been marked by a restocking program of far-reaching benefit to sportsmen of the state.

In certain areas young quail have been released under the protection of sportsmen's clubs. These areas have been closed to hunting. Time has been allotted for the breeding and development of these quail and, at the proper time, an open season will be designated.

Purpose of Farm.

The purpose of the game farm is, of course, to raise wildlife to replenish the shot-out areas of north Georgia.

Without such a program, Georgia faces complete extinction of quail, deer, turkey and other game. And that is why the work of Purser Collins, with the state game farm, is considered of incalculable value.

The farm on Briarcliff road, in DeKalb county, is one of two in the entire south. It is a revelation to sportsmen who visit there.

Modern in every detail, the farm includes an incubator house where quail, chukar and turkey are hatched.

They are then placed in brooding pens which are kept at an even temperature.

Chukar Birds.

Adult quail are fenced in other areas, as are the chukar birds, imported game birds which are the size of northern partridges and are expected to offer real variety for state hunters.

Chukar travel in coveys and are faster on the rise than are quail. Collins is more or less experimenting with chukar. They never have been released in Georgia fields before.

However, Collins' observation is that they will bring to state sportsmen a new thrill in hunting.

Collins is on the go day and night attending to all the details of the game farm. The brooding pens must be watched to see that the temperatures do not vary drastically.

For the mortality rate is high among young quail if their care is not carefully supervised. Because of his watchful attention, Collins has a high average for raising the young birds.

Sportsmen Reassured.

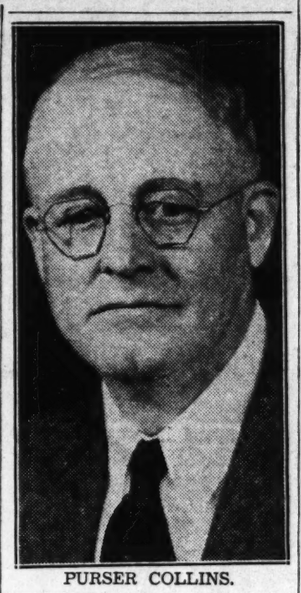

Governor Rivers gave sportsmen of all Georgia assurance yesterday that, in time, the state will be a messa for hunters by reappointing Collins.

Collins, it was, who laid out the plans for the game farm. He supervised its construction. And when the preliminary work was done, he raised the game and prepared them for shipment to the areas where scarcity of game was becoming a matter of dread concern to hunters.

The work is going ahead on a larger scale than ever. Additional brooding pens have been constructed. The game farm is a real showplace. There are almost too many quail and other game there now for the facilities.

All of which means that a program of restocking will be worked out by Joe D. Mitchell, director of the state wildlife division. The state game farm comes under this department.

Georgia sportsmen may rest assured that plentiful hunting will be provided under this program.

Overdue Winnipegs Bring Police Drive

Should auld Winnipeg tags be forgot, and never brought to mind?

Emphatically not, said Captain Jack Malcom, head of the traffic department, yesterday as he announced a drive to collect several thousand delinquent tags.

The opening gun was fired when police summoned Mack G. Hicks, attorney, with offices in the Oliver building, to answer six charges in recorder's court. Captain Malcom warned past-due Winnipegers that fines in court may be heavier than the customary $3 collateral when the tags are paid immediately.

TESTS FOR SYPHILIS ARE OFFERED FREE

State Health Department To Furnish Dark Field Specimen Outfits.

One of the most useful and at the same time most neglected procedures in the diagnosis of early syphilis is the dark field examination of exudates from suspected lesions, according to Dr. T. F. Abercrombie, director of the Department of Public Health of Georgia.

The health director announced Saturday that the laboratory of the department now has ready for free distribution special outfits for dark field specimens. The outfit consists of two small capillary tubes encased in a stoppered container. A small vial of soft paraffin is supplied for sealing the capillaries. Full directions are furnished with the outfit, Dr. Abercrombie said.

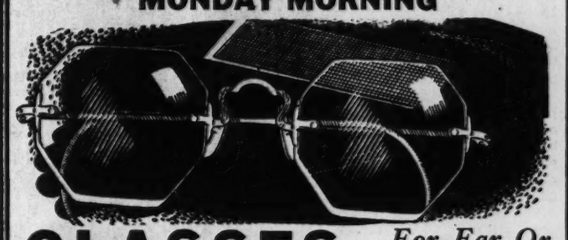

"The neglect of the dark field test is not surprising," the health director said, "due to the fact that heretofore the physician must either be equipped with a dark field microscope and be familiar with its use, or send his patient to a laboratory so equipped. Many physicians, especially those doing general practice, cannot afford the equipment and then, too, it may not be convenient to send his patient elsewhere for the test," he declared.

Until quite recently it was thought the dark field was applicable only to the examination of freshly collected specimens, Dr. Abercrombie explained, adding it has been demonstrated, however, that spirochaeta pallida (the syphilis organism) will retain its characteristic morphology for several days, even at room temperature. Exudates may be collected in small capillary tubes which may be sealed to prevent evaporation and sent by mail to laboratories hundreds of miles away for examination.

Any lesion on the genitalia or elsewhere on the body which fails to heal promptly should be regarded as syphilitic until it can be proven otherwise, Dr. Abercrombie stated. "Since the syphilitic chancre appears from two to four weeks before the blood test becomes positive, the dark field is the only laboratory aid to the diagnosis at this stage," he declared in further stressing the importance of this early test for the disease.

THOUSANDS HONOR KING OF DENMARK ON SILVER JUBILEE

Christian Observes 25th Anniversary of Accession to Throne.

COPENHAGEN, Denmark, May 15.—(AP)—Denmark showed her loyalty to democratic King Christian X today in nation-wide celebrations of the 25th anniversary of his accession to the throne.

The silver jubilee reached its peak of enthusiasm in flag-bedecked Copenhagen when most of the capital's population and thousands of visitors cheered the king on his return to Amalienborg palace from the chambers of parliament, where a joint session honored him.

Earlier in the day, crowds massed in front of the palace to cheer their sovereign. He appeared on the balcony with two other kings here for the celebrations, King Haakon, of Norway, his brother, and King Gustav, of Sweden.

The day was crowded, but the King adhered to one of his most democratic customs and took his usual early morning horseback ride through the capital's streets. A gala dinner and a torchlight procession climaxed the celebrations tonight.

Some 250,000 persons lined the route as he and Queen Alexandrine drove in an open state carriage drawn by four black horses to services at the Cathedral of Our Lady.

Denmark's King is the fifth longest reigning sovereign in Europe, but his reign is not unusual in Danish history. Since 1448 the nation has had only 19 rulers, 10 named Christian, eight Frederick and one Hans.

CATHOLIC SCHOOL IS CLOSED BY NAZIS

'Moral Conditions' Reported Reason for Action.

BERLIN, May 15.—(AP)—The closing of a Catholic boys' seminary in Heiligenstadt by Nazi state police was interpreted in some quarters today as the opening of a police campaign against Catholic educational institutions throughout Germany.

Catholic circles were particularly aroused because the Gestapo action coincided with nation-wide publicity given trials of priests and lay brothers on charges of immorality and because of official recognition of General Erich Ludendorff's pagan "German god" movement.

The Heiligenstadt seminary, where secondary school youths prepared for later priesthood training, was shut today because, the police said, of "wretched moral conditions prevailing among youthful inmates."

Whether any of the students or priests had been arrested was not known. The official German news agency, however, reported many of the boys and faculty members were being interrogated and the Gestapo seldom question anyone except behind bars.

AVIATION RESERVE SOUGHT BY NAVY

Civilian Pilots Invited To Register With U. S.

WASHINGTON, May 15.—(AP)—The navy disclosed today that it has begun to create a vast reservoir of fighting aviators who will be available for service in event of war.

Regulations issued by the Bureau of Navigation instructed the commandants of each of the 14 naval districts to invite qualified civilian pilots to register. Rosters of such men will be kept up to date for possible use in a national emergency.

Officers asserted that the registration would be purely voluntary. Those thus listed will form a "second line" reserve behind the regular peacetime naval aviation reserve, which has an enrollment of only a few hundred because funds are unavailable.

Bureau of Air Commerce records listed 15,429 active licensed male pilots as of April 1. Most of these, it was said, would be eligible for registration.

MRS. CHESTER CONKLIN PASSES IN HOLLYWOOD

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., May 15.—(UP)—A Hollywood romance that existed without tinseled glamour, press agents and publicity, came to a close today with the death of Marguerita Rouse Conklin, crippled wife of Chester Conklin, the comedian of the old silent movie days.

Conklin, who met his wife five years ago when he entertained a group of handicapped persons, was reported prostrated.

Mrs. Conklin, who was 45, was a talented violinist until she fell down a stairway at a Chicago theater and suffered paralysis which confined her henceforth to a wheelchair. From the casual meeting five years ago there developed a romance between Miss Rouse and Conklin that resulted in their marriage in 1934.

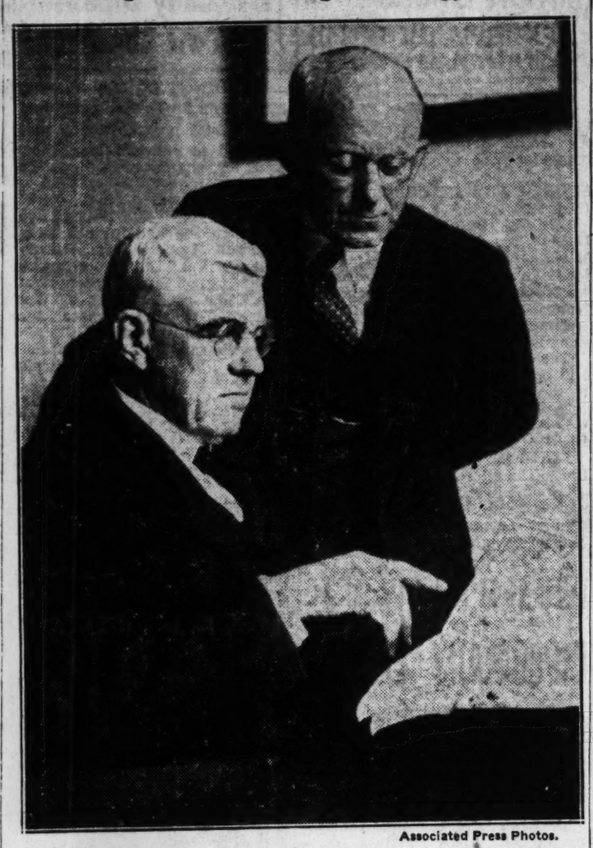

Tennessee's Ex-Faster Spends Day Fishing

DUNLAP, Tenn., May 15.—(AP)—Jackson Whitlow, Stooping Oak trapper, who recently ended what he said was a 52-day fast, celebrated his recovery today by going fishing.

Friends said the lanky mountaineer had been plannnig all week to come to Dunlap and make the fishing trip with John Smith, former superintendent of a Cumberland mountain coal mine.

Whitlow lay in his cabin for weeks, going without nourishment, he said, at "a call from the Lord." He broke the fast when he declared the Lord had told him to eat.

Retiring and Incoming Theology Deans

Associated Press Photos.

Twice declining election as a bishop, Dr. Franklin Nutting Parker, (seated), dean of the Candler School of Theology at Emory, will resign his position as dean this summer but will continue in the chair of systematic theology. Election of his successor, Dr. Henry Burton Trimble, (standing), professor of homiletics and pastoral theology, was announced yesterday.

DR. TRIMBLE NAMED PARKER SUCCESSOR

Professor Made Dean of Candler School of Theology at Emory.

Dr. Henry Burton Trimble, professor of homiletics and pastoral theology at the Candler School of Theology at Emory University, has been elected dean of the school to succeed Dr. Franklin Nutting Parker, whose resignation was announced yesterday.

Born at Hot Springs, Va., in 1885, Dr. Trimble worked his way through four degrees—an A. B. from Roanoke College, M. A. from Columbia University, B. D. from both Vanderbilt University and Union Theological Seminary and then joined the North Arkansas conference. He also holds the honorary D. D. degree from Roanoke and Hendrix Colleges.

Dr. Trimble has also served in the Little Rock, Tenn., and Western North Carolina conferences and was an army chaplain during the World War. For the past eight years he has been chairman of the budget commission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, his emphasis upon adequate support for the church's two theological schools having played an important part in raising the educational standards of the Methodist ministry.

Dr. Trimble is author of "Motive and Method in Christian Stewardship," and "The Methodist Church at Work," the latter published a few months ago.

Dr. Parker served as dean of the Theology school since 1919, in addition to holding the chair of systematic theology. Attending Centenary, Tulane and Vanderbilt, he joined the Louisiana conference in 1885 and has been a member of the general conferences of 1898, 1910, 1918, 1922, 1926, 1930 and 1934.

At the general conference of 1918 he was elected bishop, but declined. Again slated for election in 1922, he declined in order to continue his work in developing the newly-established theological school at Emory.

Dr. Parker was a member of the Chi Phi social fraternity at Vanderbilt and is an honorary member of Phi Beta Kappa at Emory. He will continue in the chair of systematic theology, it was announced.

Simons said the trained Shetland ponies will be on the tracks at both parks. The city charges a small fee for long rides. Every spring Simons rounds up a herd of Shetlands for use in the two parks. They are sold in the fall when the parks close for the winter.

SUSPECT WILL FACE QUERIES IN DEATH OF FOURTH PERSON

Lester Brockelhurst Screams and Faints as Guards Pass Cell.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., May 15.—(AP)—Lester Brockelhurst, 23, wanted in three states on murder charges, alternately screamed and fainted when guards passed his cell tonight as an Illinois sheriff planned to question him concerning a fourth slaying.

The federal government joined Illinois, Arkansas and Texas today in seeking custody of the alleged "touring slayer" as Sheriff Paul Johnson, of Rockford, Ill., said he wanted to interrogate him about the fatal shooting of Herman Luhrsen, gasoline station operator at Rockton, near Rockford, last February 12.

The sheriff, who flew here with a warrant charging Brockelhurst with the murder of Albin Theander, 57, Rockford tailor, said both men were killed by the same type of bullet.

Warrants charging Brockelhurst with the murder of Victor Gates, Little Rock, Ark., and of Jack Griffith, Fort Worth, Texas, tavern keeper, also are in the hands of Assistant District Attorney Gellert, custodian of the former Sunday school teacher and a girl companion, Bernice Felton, 18. Gellert said the prisoner had confessed the Theander, Gates and Griffith slayings.

The couple was arrested near here Thursday.

FATHERS PREPARE TO AID SON, DAUGHTER

ROCKFORD, Ill., May 15.—(AP) The stunned and saddened fathers of the young Illinois couple whose elopement ended in the Poughkeepsie, N. Y., jail promised to aid their children today.

Lester Brockelhurst's father declared he would go "wherever they take" his errant son and would "stay with him to the end."

Abraham Felton announced he would confer with an attorney concerning a defense for his daughter, Bernice.

The senior Brockelhurst, superintendent of the Church of the Latter Day Saints Sunday school in Galesburg, Ill., hurried here to confer with Felton after his boy was accused of killing three men in 35 days.

missioner, are slated to set a definite date for Forsyth county's formal entry within the next few days.

Lowndes Parley Slated.

6. J. C. Hunt, chairman of the Lowndes county commission, prepared to confer with civic leaders and others with a view of formally joining the parade of progressive Georgia counties in the awards competition.

7. Mrs. Nora Lawrence Smith, editor of the Wire Grass Farmer at Ashburn, Turner county, asserted she will ask the Lions Club and other leading citizens of the county to join Commissioners J. C. Holland, Perry Haman and J. W. Hallman in preparing a "winning program."

8. J. R. Ham, editor of the Crisp County News, and Mrs. Charles E. Brown, editor of The Dispatch, became interested in Crisp county's drive for the awards, and offered their co-operation to their commissioners during the week. Commissioners L. E. Williams, J. H. Dorough and W. C. Tyson, therefore, will have the active backing of these two progressive newspapers.

9. Mrs. B. H. Howard, editor of The Dawson County Advertiser, Dawsonville, was prepared to throw the influence of her newspaper behind a drive of Commissioners J. J. Harben, J. T. Whitmire and E. L. Garmon to place Dawson county in a position to command the attention of judges.

Tift in Field.

10. Co-operating with Tift county commissioners, Herbert L. Moor, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, was mapping a meeting at which that county proposes to officially launch a definite program designed Moor said yesterday "to win the first award for the finest and most progressive county in Georgia."

Commissioners and citizens of various counties have recognized that acomplishments thus far made during the year will be included in the judging for the awards, and that intensive programs vigorously executed will place them in line for consideration for the first award. They, therefore, have decided to press their claims through adoption of ambitious programs in which every citizen of the county is asked to join.

J. J. Parrish, editor of The Sowega Standard, and W. T. Shytle, editor of The News, both attended the meeting of the Cook County Commercial Club, at which it was decided to officially enter The Constitution awards program. On motion of Editor Parrish, the club passed unanimously resolutions pledging the co-operation of the club to commissioners.

Help Accepted.

Chairman McPhaul, speaking in behalf of the commission, accepted the proffered aid, and said Cook county proposes to bring maximum benefits of improved government to citizens during the year.

Voters of Cook county will pass on a proposed $60,000 bond issue on June 8, the same time they and the citizens of the rest of the state vote on constitutional amendments. Proceeds from the bond issue, if approved, will be devoted to construction of a new $100,000 courthouse and jail.

Harry A. Edge, Cook county agent, is secretary of the club.

Other members of the Cook county commission are B. Powell and W. R. Crumpton.

Cook county is located in the eighth congressional district and the sixth state senatorial district. It was formed on July 30, 1918, from Berrien county, and was named for General Philip Cook. It is a prosperous agricultural district.

power and economy legislation at this session.

"Perhaps those of us who have been inclined to interpose compromise with the hope that we might go on with the legitimate business of congress and the country will now be inclined to withdraw our proposals," McCarran said.

"We've Got It Licked."

"If, as it appears, there is to be no willingness to compromise it might be the attitude of those who are against the administration plan to offer no compromise, but instead to bring the issue to a straightout vote—and we've got it licked."

The statement indicated that the last possibility of any compromise agreement at next Tuesday's judiciary committee meeting was lost. The committee virtually is certain to vote to report the President's bill unfavorably.

"The administration obviously is getting desperate and threatening," Wheeler, an active foe of the court bill, said in reference to statements of Postmaster General Farley.

"They have put terrific pressure on members of the senate, but my latest count today shows definitely that there will be 49 votes against the pending court bill. There are five or six more possible opposition votes. Those are conservative figures."

Wheeler viewed Farley's attitude as "a threat that unless senators go along, they won't get any help on legislation they are interested in, they won't get any projects approved and they won't get any patronage. I'm not interested in patronage."

General opinion among senate leaders in the court fight was that the President actually would delay any final decision on compromise until after the supreme court acts on the social security legislation late this month and that, regardless of the decision, the final outcome of the controversy probably would be a compromise on two additional justices.

In regard to the remainder of the program, action will be concentrated in the house next week as far as economy is concerned. The big question will revolve around efforts of economy leaders to cut the $1,500,000,000 relief estimate of the President.

In the senate, Senator Norris, Independent, Nebraska, has a bill drawn for "multiplication" of the TVA into seven regional flood control, power development and navigation projects covering virtually all the navigable streams of the nation.

WOMAN ENVOY GETS DIPLOMACY LESSON

President Roosevelt, took the oath of office at the State Department at noon. Immediately afterward she received newspapermen.

Michael J. McDermott, the Department's press contact man, stood at her side.

One of the interviewers asked if she expected to negotiate a trade agreement with Norway.

"Oh, that's already being done," she said.

McDermott cleared his throat nervously.

"There's been no official announcement about that yet, Madam Minister," he reminded her diplomatically.

"Oh, but I thought everybody knew that," the envoy said. Presumably she still was unaware then of the enormity of her indiscretion.

"I am vastly interested in Norway," she went on, "and I hope to carry on the great work done there by my predecessor—."

McDermott was determined, however, to clear up the trade agreement situation. He interrupted:

"We have only been exploring the matter thus far. It is not quite correct to say that the negotiations are in progress."

"Oh," said Mrs. Harriman, "I see."

First Lady Dines--- At Two Luncheons

WASHINGTON, May 15.—(AP) Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt had such a busy program today that she had to eat two luncheons, whether she wanted them or not.

The first was a small picnic lunch on the White House lawn to which she had invited three high school pupils from Arthurdale, W. Va. The second was a gathering of 300 Democrats at the home of Secretary of War Harry Woodring, where the plates cost $10 each.

Previously, Mrs. Roosevelt had orange juice at the Girl Scout headquarters, after planting a memorial bush. Subsequently, she sipped fruit juice served on the White House lawn to 1,300 women executives in the government. They were guests at Mrs. Roosevelt's annual women's garden party.

OUTLAWRY OF WAR, SOCIALISTIC STATE URGED ON BAPTISTS

Group of Young Pastors Lead in Fight To Draft Liberal Commitments.

NEW ORLEANS, May 15.—(AP) A group of young, liberal pastors attempted today to commit the Southern Baptist Convention meeting here to resolutions calling for outlawry of all war, modification of the economic system by "changing our modern industrial structure from a competitive to a co-operative state" and greater privileges for labor and agriculture.

They were sent to the resolutions committee after a reading before the convention by the Rev. Charles R. Bell, 29-year-old pastor at Anniston, Ala.

Report Termed Inane.

He, his assistant and two other young pastors drafted the resolutions after the Rev. Mr. Bell had spoken from the convention floor last night and termed "inane" the report of the convention's social service commission, which condemned mob violence, aggressive war, traffic in intoxicating liquors and lax marriage statutes.

The others were James L. Anderson, of Anniston; the Rev. J. A. Simpson, of New Orleans, and the Rev. R. H. Satterfield, of Wilmington, N. C.

The resolutions declared in part:

"That since there is no distinction between offensive and defensive war, and since Christ condemned all war, we feel that as Christians we should condemn all war and refuse to participate in it. . . .

"We accept the fundamental principle that our emancipation from many of our social, economic and spiritual problems lies in changing our modern industrial structure from a competitive to a co-operative state. . . .

"We deplore the continuation of the intolerable condition of the sharecropper.

"We recognize the growing importance of the labor movement all over the world, demanding as it is, better wages, improved working conditions and the right to organize. We urge our people, whether employer or employe, to inject the spirit of Jesus into this vast and important issue, believing that love, understanding, co-operation and tolerance will do much to Christianize what promises to become the most significant non-religious movement of our day."

Urge Child Labor Control.

The resolutions favored "definite regulation" of child labor and deplored "the un-Christian basis of our present racial relationships."

After they had been sent to the resolutions committee, the Rev. Mr. Bell said he and his supporters would seek to call them out before the convention tonight.

"This is just a step," he said. "Thousands of Baptists are interested in these issues. Thousands are not. We're a long way from getting anywhere."

The revised resolutions were tabled, following lively discussion in which the Rev. W. M. Narshall Jr., of Tennille, Ga., said "we should not become involved in these labor issues."

Four years ago the Rev. Edward McNeil Poteat, of Raleigh, N. C., presented similar resolutions to a session of the Southern Baptist convention at Washington, D. C. No action was taken at succeeding meetings at Fort Worth, Texas, and Memphis, Tenn., and last year they were tabled at St. Louis.

At the opening of the convention Dr. John R. Sampey, of Louisville, president of the assemblage, made a ringing appeal for preservation of a "free church in a free state" and warned that the freedom of the church would be challenged by a "totalitarian state" if centralization of government continued.

The resolutions of the young ministers urged the Baptists to throw all their weight in the balance for peace and implored President Roosevelt to call a world conference for disarmament.

Business sessions of the convention were ended today. Baptist leaders tomorrow will conduct devotionals in denominational churches of the city.

Visiting Baptist ministers will occupy local pulpits at the morning service, and the night service in the churches will be dismissed for a final convention session tomorrow night at which Dr. George W. Truett, of Dallas, Texas, president of the Baptist World Alliance, will preach.

Prior to this sermon, the Rev. A. B. Cash, of Adairsville, Ga., will speak on the "Importance of a Graded Training Union to a Rural Church."

William D. Upshaw, of Atlanta, was named to the social service commission of the convention today, and Dr. Ryland Knight, of Atlanta, was named to the committee to study the needs of church music.

In the report of the committee on preservation of Baptist history, B. D. Ragsdale, of Macon, was commended for his work on the history of Georgia Baptists.

Zionist Leaders Taking Part in Funds Drive

JUDGE WILLIAM LEWIS

HAROLD HIRSCH

JUDGE W. M. LEWIS TO OPEN CAMPAIGN

Philadelphian To Launch Atlanta Jewish Welfare Drive for Funds.

Judge William M. Lewis, of Philadelphia, vice president of the Zionist Organization of America and national chairman of the United Palestine Appeal, will open the second annual Atlanta Jewish Welfare Fund campaign at a dinner-meeting at 7 o'clock Tuesday evening on the roof garden of the Ansley hotel.

An outstanding figure in American Jewry, Judge Lewis is also distinguished for his activity in numerous civic and cultural enterprises in his home city and state. First appointed to the bench in 1922, he received in successive elections for 10-year terms the largest majorities ever obtained by any Philadelphia judge, having previously served seven years on the city council. Formerly grand master of the Fraternal Order of Brith Sholom, Judge Lewis is also affiliated with the American Jewish Committee and the American Jewish Congress, and has held office in virtually every Jewish enterprise in Philadelphia.

Judge Lewis opens the welfare fund campaign in Charleston, S. C., next Sunday and it will be necessary for him to return to Philadelphia following his address here and then come south again at the end of the week. Harold Hirsch, prominent local attorney, and chairman of the campaign's special gifts committee, will preside at the dinner, complimentary tickets for which have been mailed to last year's contributors and prospective new contributors. Approximately 700 are expected to attend.

The campaign to raise $55,000 for non-local Jewish charities in this country and abroad will continue for 10 days, with 250 workers taking the field Wednesday morning under the leadership of Armand May and A. J. Weinberg, co-chairmen.

'Chickamauga Drummer Boy' Joins Ghost Company of Comrades in Blue

Death Takes John Lincoln Clem, Renowned as Juvenile Hero, at 11, of Union Armies in War Between the States.

By LEE ROGERS.

The "drummer boy of Chickamauga" was rolling orders to the 22d Michigan again yesterday—this time in eternity.

Death had taken the boy hero of the War Between the States back to his regiment. Once more he was with the comrades who had followed the "rat-tat-dum" of his drum on the battle fields of Shiloh and Chickamauga.

You can bet it was a great reception the hard old midwestern soldiers gave their "11-year-old" Ohio drummer boy. There'll only be dress parades and memories now—no more bullets.

But, if the welcome was great he received from comrades who had preceded him to the peaceful fields, so was the sadness his death left among the military officials of the nation he served for 55 years.

John Lincoln Clem was born in Newark, Ohio, on August 13, 1851. Though only 10 when the War Between the States began, he nevertheless attempted to join the third Ohio volunteers as a drummer boy, but was rejected because of his youth. The 22d Michigan infantry accepted him the following year and never regretted breaking the age limit rules.

A year later, at 12, John Clem was sergeant of his company. That was the beginning of a steady rise through the ranks, climaxing in his appointment as major general.

Retired Major General.

Though he was a retired major general when he died, few remembered him as other than the "drummer boy." The boy who struggled over the rough terrain of many a bloody battlefield, rolling out charge and counter charge on a drum nearly as big as he.

Conventions of the Grand Army of the Republic just weren't conventions unless the "jovial kid" drummed them together and joked all into a good humor. If a convention was missed, the "drummer boy" moped through the next year until another rolled around. Consequently, he seldom missed one.

As a beloved old man, but still the "drummer boy" to the veterans, John Clem liked to don his uniform, pin on all his medals and attend state affairs. He was especially proud of his commission as a second lieutenant in the Union army. That commission came direct from President Grant himself. He always remembered that date—December 18, 1871. That was more than can be said of the date he was promoted to be major general.

Saddened by Retirement.

It was a sad day for "the drummer boy" when he retired in 1916, just a little too soon to have fought in the World War.

But retirement didn't take him away from the army posts. With military affairs, he was actively associated until his death last Thursday in San Antonio.

He was a devoutedly religious man, a member of the Episcopal church. He enjoyed fraternity life and attained the rank of 32d degree Mason. His political affiliations naturally were Republican.

"The drummer boy" was twice married but had two children.

Yesterday army men talked of a military burial for the "kid" in Arlington National cemetery.

"The drummer boy" would like that. Not for any reason of personal glory, but because he would be resting with other military men who fought for the nation he loved.

But, wherever they bury the mortal remains of the 22d Michigan's drummer, it's a safe bet the spiritual drum will beat a call for the 22d—and his comrades will respond.

TRACKLESS CARS GOING IN SERVICE HERE BY JUNE 20

With all technicalities which have been holding up the installation of trackless trolleys between Atlanta, Hapeville and College Park removed, the Georgia Power Company announced yesterday the first shipment of the new conveyances would arrive this week and be placed in operation on June 20.

Immediately following this announcement, Commissioner George F. Longino, chairman of the Fulton public works, said work on paving projects along the old street car right of ways between McCall's Crossing and East Point, East Point and Hapeville, and East Point and College Park would begin as soon as the trackless trolleys began operations.

When the paving of the old street car right of way on Lee street between Atlanta and East Point is completed, a 50-foot highway leading into Atlanta will be provided, Longino said. The car tracks will be torn up and paving laid where they were, he said.

Marietta Highway.

Another paving project, the hard-surfacing of the Atlanta-Marietta highway, will begin within the next few weeks, the public works chairman declared. This road has already been graded and will be paved with federal and state funds. The county is to assist in some of the work.

Buckhead citizens yesterday announced they would ask the State Highway Department to widen the Roswell road between Buckhead and Roswell, providing a four-lane, 100-foot roadway.

This project is sponsored by the Buckhead "50" Club, and various women's organizations from cities along the route which leads from Atlanta to Neal's Gap and thence to Asheville, N. C. The ultimate goal of the sponsors is to have the route widened from Atlanta to Asheville.

Plans call for a 25-foot strip on each side of the road to be beautified by the women.

To Speed Service.

With the installation of the trackless cars, the power company announces the schedule between the serviced cities will be speeded up 25 per cent and that 11 minutes will be cut from the running time between Atlanta and College Park, a distance of nine miles.

The State Highway Department last week allocated $150,000 for the widening and beautification of the Roosevelt highway between Red Oak and Palmetto. Approximately $134,000 of this will be used for road work and $16,000 for enhancing the beauty of the route.

FARM LABOR SHORT, WPA JOB IS HALTED

Project Discontinued To Provide Workers in Agricultural Areas.

MACON, Ga., May 15.—(AP)—G. Roy Bethune, Macon district employment office head, reports discontinuance of WPA projects in middle Georgia has been started to alleviate the farm labor shortage in this section.

The employment official said one project was halted yesterday in Peach county and another is to close early next week.

Bethune said the closing was effected after W. S. Dennis, seventh WPA district director, had offered co-operation of his organization "all the way" in an effort to solve the farm labor shortage in middle Georgia.

As the need for further labor becomes apparent, the employment office head continued, additional works projects will be closed—"all of them in this district, if necessary."

Broken Limbs Fail To Stop Youth, 12-Year School Record Unbroken

'Kit' Braselton Will Be Graduated Wednesday Despite 'Breaks.'

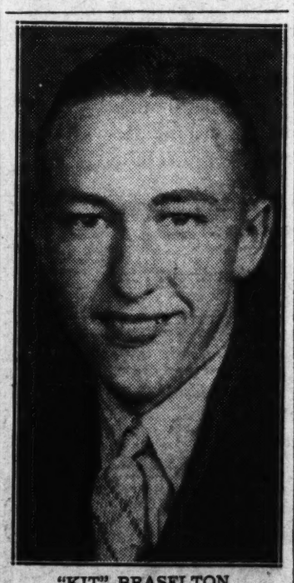

BRASELTON, Ga., May 15.—Herbert Brown "Kit" Braselton may break his neck to get through college—but he's that determined.

Good or bad, the breaks are all the same to "Kit." He will be graduated from Braselton High school Wednesday despite three of them—all bad. None of the three, however, caused him to break his classes, which is a good break after all.

"Kit" is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Green Braselton, his father being one of the founders of the Braselton High school.

Despite the fact he twice has suffered fractures of one arm, and also a broken leg, he is completing 12 years of school without a day's absence. When it was merely a broken arm, he walked to school, and when his leg was fractured, he asked to be carried. And despite all this, he has maintained a high average in his scholastic work, as well as taken an active part in athletics.

And now, with college next in prospect, one of "Kit's" immediate ambitions is to make the football team, where he hopes (with proper modesty) to break records instead of bones. All Braselton, his friends say, hopes he gets a break—a good one.

"KIT" BRASELTON.

Constitution Staff Photo—Slayton

One reason for Tift county's increasing prosperity is seen above as little Miss Wennie Freeman holds thousands of the 100,000,000 tomato plants produced by the county this season. The plants are shipped for transplanting in fields throughout the entire east at an average price of about $1.25 per 1,000. Cabbage, sweet potato and onion plants also are produced for transplanting as one of Tift county's principal agricultural activities. Tifton's half dozen tobacco warehouses are pressed into service for shipping purposes.

TALMADGE, G. O. P. ACCUSED BY RIVERS

gether once more in an effort to defeat our program of progress."

Rivers said "there can be no doubt but that in drafting this resolution the state Republican executive committee was consorting with their cohorts who in the last campaign claimed to be Democrats but who the people of Georgia knew were not Democrats.

"The issue on these amendments at last is clearly drawn," Rivers asserted. "It is now the Republican party against the Democratic party."

Attacking opponents of his social security program as reactionaries "inspired by those who would throttle the progress of our country and wreck the achievements of the Roosevelt administration," the Governor called upon the members of the general assembly to organize their counties in support of the constitutional amendments.

Speaking at a downtown hotel, the Governor continued his campaign in support of the amendments, declaring that defeat of the program, which is sponsored by the Democratic state executive committee, "will retard the progress of Georgia for a generation."

Pleads for Children.

The Governor was aided by Coroner Paul Donehoo, of Atlanta, who spoke in behalf of the amendment to permit Georgia's participation in the program to provide aid for the blind and by Colonel W. W. Webb, of Hahira, who spoke in support of the old people who would be benefited by old-age pensions. Governor Rivers spoke in behalf of the dependent children, saying that they had no one else to speak for them. The Governor's speech was broadcast over station WSB.

The "session" was jointly presided over by Senate President John B. Spivey and Speaker Roy V. Harris, of the house of representatives.

"Every element of reactionarism in our state is fighting this program," the Governor declared. "Look under the chips and see who they are. They are the same people who for years have been trying to throttle the progress of our state.

Support of All Urged.

"You have heard Colonel Webb and Mr. Donehoo speak in behalf of the old folks and the blind people. I want to speak to you in behalf of the widows and the dependent children who have no one else to speak for them. How under Heaven are we going to build up our state if these sinister forces of Wall street are going to continue their strangle hold on our people? How are we going to see that these motherless and fatherless children are reared into useful citizens if the state does not help them? Who is going to take care of the aged and the infirm if not the state? I urge every member of the assembly and every person within the sound of my voice, either present or listening on the radio to work untiringly for these amendments between now and June 8."

Governor Rivers said he had no fear of the outcome but that he desired a great majority for each of the amendments "in order that the forces which have been barring our progress will learn with finality that there is no place for them in Georgia."

"We showed these enemies of progress last September just what the people of Georgia think of them and we will show them even stronger on June 8," the Governor said. "Apparently they did not learn sufficiently last year that they can no longer fool the people by seeing that the rich are cared for and that the poor will have to live on the crumbs of the rich man's table.

To Aid Poor.

"We are going to see that the poor have their inning. The rich can take care of themselves."

The Governor's aides centered their addresses about the particular phases of the program in which they are interested.

Colonel Webb is the president of the Georgia Old-Age Pension Association.

"In the last 12 months I have been all over Georgia organizing these old people and you have but to look into their tearful faces to understand that their one big hope in life lies in the present national and state administrations," he declared. "Congress and the general assembly have done their part and it is up to the people of Georgia now to see that the program reaches fulfillment.

"All over the state I have had these old people plead with me and urge me to leave nothing undone in order that they will get their pensions.

"I want to thank the members of the general assembly for submitting the amendment and for setting up a structure which will assure the prompt payment of these pensions as soon as the people approve the amendment, which I am certain they will do by a big majority despite the opposition of those so thoroughly discredited by the voters of Georgia."

Donehoo Lauds Program.

Coroner Donehoo said that he believes the program for aiding the blind people the best ever put forward.

"We have blind men and women and especially blind children all over this state who are trying to find their place in society and this program will do more to help them than anything that has ever been offered," the Fulton county official said. "I believe that everyone with a touch of humanity in their heart will help us put these amendments over."

Governor Rivers declared that the decisions of three judges who had been asked to halt the election "broke the back" of the opposition to the amendment.

"The reactionaries have been telling you how easy it would be to defeat these amendments but at the same time they have been running to court using every means at their command in an effort to prevent us from voting on the question," he said. "Not one, not two but three judges have ruled within a week that the election is legal. No one knows any better than these foes of the old people, of the widows, of the blind and of the dependent children that the backbone of their campaign has been broken. We are now headed for the greatest victory the supporters of progress in Georgia have ever known."

The Governor thanked the members of the assembly for their presence and assured them that at the proper time he would call an extra session to meet the problems of the state.

The assemblymen, for the most part, reported that the amendments were in high favor in their sections.

The state Republican executive committee, headed by Chairman Clint W. Hager, of Atlanta, former United States district attorney, yesterday called upon members of the Republican party to vote against all of the 26 constitutional amendments and to vote against the proposal for repeal of Georgia prohibition law.

Chairman Hager said that all of the committee's 16 members were present at the meeting.

Heavy Cost Charged.

The resolution charged that approval of the amendments will increase the cost of the state government 300 per cent.

"These proposed amendments," the resolution said, "if adopted will saddle upon the back of every taxpayer in Georgia a crushing and unconscionable tax burden and will add a veritable army of officeholders, selected for the purpose of building a colossal political machine rather than for their personal ability, efficiency, honesty and integrity.

"As part of the scheme to ram down the throats of the unsuspecting, credulous and indifferent voters of Georgia, these half-baked 'soak the poor' tax measures, the present administration has tacked on as a bait the repeal of Georgia's liquor laws, that it may have an unlimited slush fund to sugar coat with embellished publicity these burdensome and unfair tax laws.

"The Republican party is a dry party and deplores the proposal to thrust the state of Georgia into the saloon business and thus corrupt and debauch the morals of our young people."

Home Exemptions Assailed.

Detailing the proposals at length the resolution attacked the proposal to provide homestead exemptions and charged that if adopted it will cripple the smaller counties of the state.

The resolution also attacked the special bus and truck license fixed by the assembly to provide funds for the new system of rural routes being inaugurated by the Rivers administration. It also attacked the revised state income tax program and other measures adopted by the legislature.

Referring to the Rivers social security program, the resolution said:

"We condemn the so-called social security and old-age pension law as a cheap piece of 'clap-trap' legislation."

GROWERS, BROKERS BUILD NEW MARKET IN FARMS OF NORTH

Huge Lots Are Sent to Canada and Other Points for Transplanting.

"Born in Georgia," many, many millions of tomato plants this year will grow to maturity in northern soil.

From Tifton, Valdosta, Omega, Pavo, Barwick and other south Georgia cities and towns, an immense number of young tomato plants are being moved weekly to northern and eastern points, swelling postal receipts and express tonnage to a marked degree.

The growing and shipment of plants is not new to south Georgia, but it is a business which is growing by leaps and bounds. In days gone by, farmers further north grew their own plants, but in recent years they have learned it is more profitable to buy them "ready-made" and thus get their crops off to an earlier start.

Plant brokers in the larger shipping centers are handling millions of plants each week. Already, says one report, 12 carloads of plants have been shipped from Tift county alone, and more will be moved this season than ever before. One Valdosta broker recently booked orders for 6,300,000 plants in less than a week. One Tifton grower, during last week, shipped 50,000 plants to a single Canadian grower.

So large has the plant-shipping business grown that growers and brokers have pressed now-empty tobacco warehouses into service to handle their business.

Bashful Baby Lions Bar Picture Posing

Bashful baby lions at Grant park zoo were scheduled to have their pictures taken yesterday and to be christened in impressive ceremonies, but the affair failed to take place.

The reason: The mother lion was too bashful herself.

Queen Martha, the mother of four cubs whose names are Scarlett, Melanie, Rhett and Ashley, after the characters of Margaret Mitchell's "Gone With the Wind," refused to allow the photographers around yesterday. She scuttled into her box with her cubs every time any one appeared near her cage.

Parks Manager George J. Simons and Uncle Matt Leonard, the zoo keeper, said it will be next Saturday before the public will have a chance to see the famous lion family.

Activity Increases on Both Sides In Prohibition Repeal Campaign

Advocates of Regulated Liquor Traffic Take To Air To Spread Arguments; Drys Name Fulton Committees for Drive.

The prohibition repeal campaign warmed up considerably yesterday when the repeal forces took to the air in carrying on their campaign in support of the change, while the dry forces announced organization work had been perfected in Fulton county and laid plans for an intensive drive between now and June 8 when the people will vote on the repeal proposal.

S. Marvin Griffin, of Bainbridge, chairman of the Georgia Alcohol Control Association, speaking over radio station WSB, declared a vote for repeal is a vote for temperance and charged liquor is being sold openly and untaxed all over Georgia.

Meanwhile a local organization of the advocates of prohibition was perfected with H. Y. McCord Sr., as chairman; Dr. Louie D. Newton, vice chairman, and Perry Bloodworth as secretary, and an executive committee composed of Colonel B. L. Bugg, Philip Weltner, W. W. Gaines, Mrs. L. O. Freeman, Dr. Richard Orme Flinn, Dr. W. A. Shelton, Dr. C. R. Stauffer, Mrs. J. W. Awtry, Mrs. Arthur H. Waite Jr., Mrs. J. W. McEachern, Mrs. M. E. Tilley, Arthur Hayes, Graham Clark, Tom Penland, Kendrick Kelley, and Tom Hill.

The dry organization yesterday announced that Representative L. A. Whipple, of Bleckley county, leader of the prohibition forces in the house of representatives, has been named co-director of the dry campaign.

Judge Whipple, a leader of prohibition forces for years, issued a statement attacking the repeal proposal and predicting its defeat.

Speakers Ready.

Four minute speakers will be provided for any and all meetings where such speakers are desired. Application should be made to Perry Bloodworth, chairman of this committee. Various subcommittees will work in their respective districts, seeking to arouse interest in the election on June 8.

The local organization is working with the state organization of Georgia in every detail of the program to strengthen the observance and enforcement of the prohibition law and maintain it as a fixed attitude of this state in dealing with the liquor traffic.

Statement by McCord.

Mr. McCord, chairman of the local organization, made this statement Saturday:

"Georgia is called on once again to express itself on the liquor question, and I believe the verdict will be in favor of prohibition, despite the fact that the present law has not been enforced as it might have been and should have been. We know the record of the old saloon days when the state was in the liquor business, and we do not want to return to that condition. There are numerous counties in the state that are now successfully enforcing the law, and with an aroused public opinion on the subject, we can enforce it in every county and in every city. I appeal to the good citizens of Georgia to go to the polls on June 8 and vote against repeal."

Dr. Louie D. Newton, vice chairman of the local organization, and a member of the state committee, directing the series of radio broadcasts over station WSB against the repeal of the prohibition law, made this statement yesterday:

"The argument that the legalization of the liquor traffic would insure enforcement of the law is not convincing in the face of facts in Georgia's days of the legalized saloon and of facts in other states that have recently repealed their prohibition laws. Nor is the argument of greatly increased tax returns convincing when it is subjected to the analysis of the increased cost of dealing with crime incident to the spread of the liquor menace when given governmental sanction. No amount of taxes can justify the degradation of liquor. I believe that we come nearer controlling liquor when it is outlawed, than when it is given the respectability of legalization."

Challenges Dry Claims.

In his radio speech, Griffin, who was making the first of a series of addresses in support of legalization of liquor, took issue with claims made by the dry forces.

"Two years ago I introduced a control bill in the legislature to regulate, control and tax the sale of spiritous liquors in this state," he said. "Subsequent to the adjournment of the legislature, I canvassed the state in support of a regulatory bill which I believed to be for the best interest of our people. In the special election of May 15, 1935, the opponents of control and regulation received a majority of 243 votes. As a citizen of Georgia and one who is proud of his ideals as well as his state, I returned to my newspaper and devoted my time to my business, and at no time did I criticize the result of the election, but devoted my columns to a campaign for law enforcement, although I realized that the vote was not decisive or in my opinion indicative of sentiment in the state. I hoped that the state of Georgia would arise, cease to be the laughing stock of the several states of the Union, and occupy her place in the sun. I was mistaken then and I know that conditions today are decidedly worse than they were two years ago.

"After two more years of miserable failure in an endeavor to promote temperance and inculcate into the hearts and minds of our people a respect for law, a law which prohibits nothing, I am convinced, as are the majority of Georgians, who understand what the liquor traffic is doing to our state and who understand what is going on, and who do not have a selfish interest at stake, that what whisky needs is regulation and control and not indifference and inattention.

Only One Issue.

"The opponents of control and regulation differ with us on only one point. They preach the evils of whisky, they tell of the terrible toll alcohol has reaped and there is not one man among us who does not agree with them wholeheartedly, but my friends that is as far as the story goes. Most of these evils, most of this corruption, most of the degredation has come about and has been promoted under a useless and inaffective prohibition law. That whisky is an evil, no sensible person denies, but because it is an evil, there is no reason to let it ruin our state, corrupt our law-enforcing agencies, make slaughter houses out of highways and degenerate the morals of our young men and women. The only line of demarcation between the two forces in Georgia today is on the question of just how spiritous liquors can best be controlled. The whisky traffic is not being controlled or restricted now, and although the principles of our opponents may be laudable and the pledges they make be sincere, what assurance and comfort can the people of Georgia enjoy by a retention of the present skeleton who is weaker today than he was two years ago?

"Georgians are generally the same from the hills of Habersham to the wiregrass of south Georgia and are amenable to reason. The campaign to legalize, control, regulate and tax spiritous liquors is based upon an appeal to reason and citizenship. There is no need to get wrought up over the situation because every man, woman and child in the state is perfectly familiar with conditions as they are now.

Sold Everywhere.

"Whisky is sold in every hamlet in the state. It is sold to anyone who has the money with which to buy it, young and old alike. The federal government issued nearly 5,000 retail liquor dealer stamps to people. selling spiritous liquors in the state of Georgia in one-half-year period during the year 1936. That number must be correct because the opponents of control and regulation locked it up and told us about it. Several businessmen in the city of Atlanta have requested the mayor and council to pass an ordinance prohibiting curb service, due to the drunken parties of young people who make nuisances of their places of business Whisky and spiritous liquors are sold at any time to anybody day and night and all day Sunday. One is not able to purchase beer on Sunday in the cities of Georgia, but one can purchase liquor and in many instances at the suggestion of the man who refuses to sell his beer on Sunday. Just what are we going to do about this state of affairs? I say that we shall not do anything about it unless we vote to legalize, regulate and control liquor and the liquor traffic. The most abominable things which has ever been created for the degradation of man should be brought out of the back alleys and from behind closed doors and given the careful attention, scrutiny and right arm of our law-enforcing agencies. Prohibition does not prohibit, but regulation and control might regulate. Whatever regulation will do for us will be just that much more than what is being done today.

True Temperance Vote.

"In view of the situation, we contend that a vote to regulate and a vote to control is the true temperance vote. The issue has ceased to be will Georgia be wet or dry. Georgia is already wet and the question before our people is, shall we control and regulate the whisky being sold throughout our state or shall we permit the bootlegger to apply his nefarious trade unchecked, untrammelled and unnoticed. One often hears the statement that one canont vote to legalize and control, because that would be voting for whisky, but I say to you fellow Georgians how can that be a true and binding obligation when spiritous liquors are sold in every nook and corner of our state?"

Committee of Drys.

Widening of Avenue To Cut Jam Mapped

Tentative plans for widening the roadway on Peachtree Battle avenue to relieve the daily traffic congestion when the E. Rivers school dismisses were completed yesterday.

If they are adopted, the two park areas in the center of the avenue will be narrowed to give a 40-foot instead of the current 25-foot passage way on the south side of the street and a 45-foot drive on the north. These figures are only approximations.

Under existing conditions, traffic on Peachtree road and Peachtree Battle avenue, at their junction, is tied up daily by the mass of cars calling for the children as they are dismissed. The congestion occurs despite the efforts of two county officers stationed there for the school dismissal.

FATHER CONFIDENT THAT DODD IS RIGHT

Carolinan Says Envoy to Berlin Knows What He Is Talking About.

FUQUAY SPRINGS, N. C., May 15.—(UP)—John D. Dodd said tonight that he didn't "doubt for a moment" the statement of his son, Ambassador William E. Dodd, that a billionaire plans a Fascist dictatorship in the United States.

Dodd said he did not know the identity of the billionaire referred to by his son, the American ambassador to Germany, in letters to senators.

"But," he said, "I don't doubt for a moment but that Will knows what he is talking about. He knows what is going on and nobody is fooling him."

Dodd predicted his son would not reveal the identity of the billionaire who is said to be ready to finance a Fascist dictator. "You might as well try to move the sun as to try to make Will tell anything that he's not-a-mind to tell," he said.

Meanwhile, the State Department in Washington had "no comment" on the allegations made by Dodd in letters to senators in which he urged support of the President's court reform bill as insurance against a Fascist dictator.

Officials said they were "not disturbed" by a resolution introduced by Senator Gerald P. Nye, North Dakota, Republican, to require the State Department to reveal the name of the billionaire.

"He Who Careth Not Whence He Came Careth Little Whither He Goeth."

THOUSANDS HAIL KING GEORGE, QUEEN IN LONDON STREETS

British Capital Jammed by Week-End Holiday Visitors.

LONDON, May 15.—(UP)—The King and Queen received another tumultous demonstration of loyalty from millions of subjects today when they drove from Buckingham palace to Windsor castle for a quiet week end to rest up from the arduous duties of coronation week.

They were accompanied by their daughters, Princesses Elizabeth, heir presumptive to the throne, and Margaret Rose.

London, as a climax to coronation week, was jammed as hundreds of thousands, freed by the Whitsuntide week end holiday, poured into the capital to swell the ranks of the visitors from at home and abroad who were already here.

Spontaneous celebrations lasted well into the night, from lowly East End pubs to the swank hotels and night clubs of the West End. The crowds danced and shouted everywhere in the streets and it was noteworthy that the utmost good humor prevailed, with a great deal of confusion and boisterousness but little brawling or serious disorder.

ALASKAN METROPOLIS VIRTUALLY INUNDATED

FAIRBANKS, Alaska, May 15. (AP)—Three-fourths of this interior Alaska town remained under water today as ice jams continued to dam the flooding Tanana and Chena rivers.

Mayor E. B. Collins said the city was in no immediate need of outside assistance but hoped the flood would arouse action on the long-sought federal flood control project.

Although the temperature dropped to 26 above zero last night, the streams continued to rise slowly from melting snows.

Let Yourself Go!

GREEN as a billiard table, blue as a brand-new pair of overalls . . . it's a new world, a May morning. Down on the warm brown earth pours the mellow sunshine . . . the robins are nesting, pussy-willows have given way to lilacs and the plum trees are a burst of bloom. It's time to travel, partner. So . . . ease yourself behind the wheel . . . all outdoors is calling. Let yourself go!

Slip into a good used car. Pile in—with the kids, the pup and the lunch basket. Glide away from four walls, the kitchen sink, the office grind. Slide behind the wheel—and let yourself go!

Over the hills and far away stretch the long, long roads, away from filling stations and billboards to a land of clear skies, clearer water and barefoot farmers' boys.

Ease in the clutch, mister, and let yourself go! Now at last comes those rare days that are felt rather than seen—days when dull matter-of-fact things melt away in the summer sunshine and Youth, Romance and Glorious Adventure wait always beyond the road's next turning.

Atlanta's leading auto dealers present their best values in The Constitution. Turn now to the Want Ad Pages and investigate the used car offerings.

BRITAIN, GERMANY REPORTED SEEKING BETTER RELATIONS

Italo-Nazi Friendship, Observers Declare, Remains Steadfast.

BERLIN, May 15.—(AP)—Newspaper bannerlines and other officially-controlled manifestations indicated today that powerful forces are at work to improve German-British relations.

To international observers it has been evident for some time that Germany is at least considering the relative advantages of British and Italian friendship.

Let Italo-German friendship, in so far as it goes, seems to remain steadfast.

3 NATIONS REPORTED "HOLDING HANDS"

LONDON, May 15.—(AP)—Authoritative observers saw strong indications tonight that England, Germany and France have been holding hands under the cloak of coronation excitement.

Premier Mussolini's declaration today that Italy will make herself economically self-sufficient was taken here as an indication he had heard about this development.

The British press has borne down on the "personal success" being scored by Marshal Werner von Blomberg, and German Ambassador Joachim von Ribbentrop's coronation party easily received the best "press" of any similar function.

IL DUCE SAYS ITALY WILL BE SELF-SUFFICET

ROME, May 15.—(AP)—Italy will make herself economically self-sufficient even if she has to work "25 hours a day," Premier Mussolini proclaimed today. He called this program a guarantee of peace and a surety of "the life, the future and the power" of the Italian people.

The premier laid down his dictum before cheering members of the Corporative Guild, which includes representatives of all phases of Fascist life, at their annual meeting in the Julius Caesar hall of the old capitol building.

NEW COURT ACTION SEEN IN VOTE WAR

spending public funds for the election, ordered by the 1937 general assembly and embracing amendments in Governor Rivers' "New Deal" program.

Dave M. Parker and W. H. Duckworth, assistant attorneys general, assisted County Attorneys G. H. Mingledorff and J. A. Roberts in the defense.

When Parker arose to speak, Judge Dickerson said "I would rather hear the other side first."

Both Moore and R. B. Chastain, associate counsel for the plaintiffs, spoke briefly. They argued that the election was special in view of "legislative intent." They contended amendments could be voted on only at the November general election.

"The spirit of the bill calling the election and the whole purpose of it," Moore said, "constitutes a special election." Spectators were few at the courthouse hearing.

Judge Dickerson's decision was the same as that in similar actions presented before Judges Berry Moseley, at Danielsville, and J. Harold Hawkins, at Marietta.

Amendments in behalf of which Governor Rivers has spoken specifically include proposals to provide for old-age pensions and other social security measures, revise tax laws and authorize the general assembly to convene itself in extraordinary session.

Former Picturesque Congressman, Percy L. Gassaway, Dies Suddenly

Friends Say His Heart Was as Big as His Cowboy Hat.

WASHINGTON, May 15.—(AP)—Capitol Hill heard with sadness today that the one-time cowboy congressman, Percy L. Gassaway, was dead.

Singularly, the congressional friends of the picturesque Oklahoman—and he had dozens of them—asked one another the same question—a subject that Gassaway often talked about:

"How did he die?"

With a touch of the poet about him—Old Gas, as he called himself—would often tell his friends in Washington that the way he wanted to go was riding the range against a western sunset.

Gassaway didn't die that way.

He was stricken at 8 a. m. today in his ranch home near Coalgate, Okla., and death came while a motored ambulance was taking him to the hospital at Ada. He was 51.

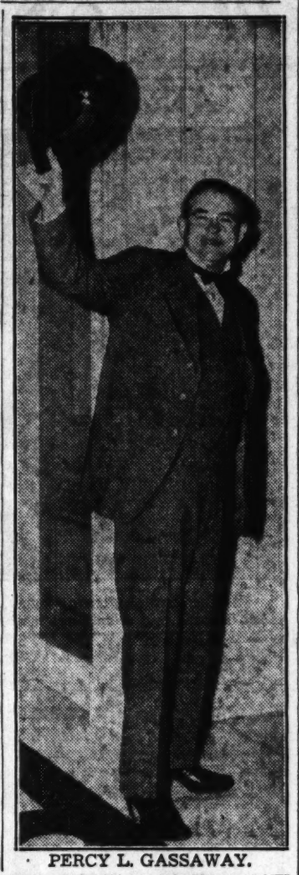

Gassaway had his own ideas about how to represent his constituents. He maintained to his intimate friends that his horseback riding and other stunts about the capital were the best method of bringing to the public's attention measures he advocated, or measures he didn't.

He was often unpredictable.

At the conclusion of a nationwide radio address, he suddenly turned to a studio piano, planked himself down at the keys and burst into a rousing cowboy song.

Consistency, however, marked the oral tributes to him today.

"His heart," they said, "was as big as his cowboy hat."

PERCY L. GASSAWAY.

LIFE UNDERWRITERS TO HOLD BREAKFAST

Affair To Launch Local Program for Life Insurance Week.

An early bird breakfast tomorrow morning attended by some 400 agents and solicitors will launch Atlanta participation in National Life Insurance Week, designed as an "educational, co-operative and promotional" campaign keyed to the theme that "the sooner you plan yor future the better your future will be."

Holcombe T. Greene and Charles G. Bethea, in charge of publicity arrangements, emphasized the campaign will be wholly educational.

The 7:45 o'clock Monday morning meeting at the Athletic Club, at which Charles J. Currie, president of Atlanta Life Underwriters, will preside, will be the only local gathering; the balance of the campaign will be executed through newspaper and radio advertising.

$79,392 ALLOWED SANITATION UNITS

Government Resumes Project Suspended Owing to Shortage of WPA Funds.

Federal funds totaling $79,392 for the construction of 2,000 pit type sanitation stations on property not served by sewage systems have been released and work on the project will be resumed Wednesday, George Newton, county sanitary engineer, announced yesterday.

The projects was halted last January, after 517 plants had been constructed, because of shortage of WPA funds, the engineer explained.

Under the plan, the federal government will supply all labor for constructing the plant, provided the property owner furnishes the materials. Cost to the owner is $18.

Persons desiring to secure a station for their property should apply to project headquarters on Whiteway street, East Point.

Stations will be built on any property in the county, congested areas or rural, that is not served by a sewer system, Newton declared.

Under the federal program, 925 plants have been constructed in DeKalb county and 694 in Cobb county.

HOTEL RAID NETS MEN, DICE LAYOUT

Police Report Scooping Up Several Hundreds of Dollars, Seizing Nine.

A room on the 11th floor of a downtown hotel was raided by police and nine men were arrested early last night. The raiders said a professional dice table stood in the center of the room, with several hundred dollars in cash on it, and that one of the men held a croupier's rake in his hands.

Roaming Youth Of U.S. Reported Returning Home

ST. PAUL, May 19.—(AP)—America's wandering youths are back home again.

The boys and girls who aimlessly roamed the United States a few years ago are now at work or in school, Colonel Hulda Smith, of Chicago, commander of the northwest area of the Volunteers of America, reported today at the organization's annual national council.

She expressed the opinion the National Youth Administration and the CCC camps "had a wonderful influence" on the youthful itinerants of the depression while business, industry and agriculture had removed many of them from the road.

"A few years ago, when the depression was at its worst, so many of our young people started drifting," she said. "Drifting from one town to another—from their homes to parks and hobo 'jungles' in strange cities—from wholesome circles to petty thievery and crime—in short, from bad to worse.

"But wandering youth, at least the young hobo type so common a few years ago, has practically disappeared from the United States."

La Salle V-8

BREAKS STOCK CAR RECORD

for Indianapolis Speedway

Ralph DePalma Averages 82.18 Miles Per Hour in 500-Mile Run

ON MONDAY, MAY 10TH, a stock model LaSalle V-8—running under A.A.A. supervision—broke the stock car record for the Indianapolis Speedway!

With Ralph DePalma at the wheel, the distance was covered in 366 minutes—an average of 82.18 miles per hour! This is almost 8 miles per hour faster than the original Speedway record established by racing cars!

The tank was filled with regular pump-type Ethyl gasoline, and only regulation motor oil was used. The oil consumption was less than one quart!

In spite of the record time, it was not a trial for speed. The run was made to prove La Salle's endurance, roadability, safety and handling ease. Had DePalma tried for speed, he could have bettered his time materially.

At the finish of the run, DePalma wired the Cadillac factory as follows:

"I finished third in the original Indianapolis race, and I was physically and mentally exhausted. Today, I feel fine after completing the same 500 miles in a LaSalle at a much faster pace. I never drove a car that performed in so effortless a fashion or handled so easily. My hat is certainly off to LaSalle!"

NEWS of STAGE and SCREEN

Miriam Hopkins and Joel McCrea At Grand in 'Woman Chases Man'

Do men like to be chased by women? They love it! And don't let them tell you different until you've seen "Woman Chases Man," the rollicking Samuel Goldwyn comedy in which Miriam Hopkins is chasing Joel McCrea across the screen at Loew's Grand theater this week.

Miss Hopkins makes a happy return to the sphere of rafter-rocking comedy in this grand, goofy story of a destitute girl architect who chased a wealthy but handsome young tightwad clear across the continent to get him to finance his nutty inventor dad's model village and wound up with his name on the dotted line of both the contract and a marriage license. Charles Winninger, Erik Rhodes, Ella Logan, Leona Maricle and Broderick Crawford are featured in the supporting cast. John Blystone directed "Woman Chases Man" for release through United Artists.

Also of interest on the program is a musical revue, "Some Time Soon," a Fitzpatrick Travelog in Technicolor, "Picturesque South Africa," and a double-length "News of the Day."

'Midnight Court' Capitol Picture; 'Manhattan Serenade' for Stage

"Midnight Court," a melodrama whose characters are introduced to the audience at one of those new type of police tribunals, will be the featured offering starting today at the Capitol theater, with the popular Ann Dvorak in the starring role. John Litel and a group of well-known players appear in support.

On the stage the Capitol management has selected "Manhattan Serenade" as the flesh entertainment for the week, with a cast of 25 variety performers offering eight acts of vaudeville.

Headline acts with this new stage unit include Arthur La Fluer and company, the human top; the King troupe, acrobatics and handbalancing; Morasco and Hayton, a different comedy act; Billy Hayden, Broadway's favorite mimic; Helena Hayes, blues singer; the Dawn sisters, just two little girls and a host of others.

The Manhattan Serenaders, augmented with Enrico Leide's Capitolians, making a 15-piece stage band, will furnish the music for the week under the direction of Enrico Leide.

"Midnight Court," the feature has to do with the manner in which crooks organize into gangs for the purpose of stealing automobiles. The picture likewise goes into the new form of court, which has been adopted in important cities as a means of serving out justice in a more efficient manner.

Ann Dvorak plays the role of a court stenographer who is horrified when one of the vagabonds in the lineup turns out to be the brilliant lawyer (John Litel), who was once her husband.

Litel's regeneration with Ann's aid, his exposure, and the breaking up of a gang of automobile thieves that has been terrorizing the city, is the theme.

Starting next Sunday the Capitol will offer "Time Out for Romance," starring Claire Trevor and Michael Whalen.

'JUNGLE PRINCESS' PLAYS BUCKHEAD

Dorothy Lamour Starred in Romance of Malayan Wilds.

The Buckhead theater's offering for today, tomorrow and Tuesday is "The Jungle Princess," a thrilling romance in the heart of the Malayan jungle. Dorothy Lamour, whose golden voice has captivated the nation on the radio, makes her film debut in this picture. Ray Milland plays the part of the explorer in the Malay jungle.

Grace Moore goes to town in "When You're in Love," to be seen Wednesday and Thursday. Can you imagine glorious Grace Moore buying herself a husband in a Mexican jail or swinging the strains of "Minnie the Moocher?" Cary Grant plays the leading male role.

Mystery and comedy alternate throughout "The Plot Thickens," the picture for Friday only. James Gleason and ZaSu Pitts are teamed as the detective duo.

Saturday fans are promised real excitement in the thrill picture of the year, "Bengal Tiger," starring Barton MacLane, June Travis and Warner Hull. The second chapter of the new serial, "Jungle Jim," and a cartoon complete the program for Saturday.

THE SHADOW OF DEATH.

Peter Ylagau, 30, and Eldutrio Vargas, 28, announced in a saloon in New York they hated each other. One drew a revolver and shot the other through the chest; the wounded man grabbed the gun as he fell and shot the other in the abdomen. Then, as the barroom cleared of scared customers, the two seriously wounded men linked arms and assisted each other into a taxi, which took them to a hospital.

'ONE IN A MILLION' SHOWS AT TEMPLE

Cherokee Avenue House Has Sonja Henie Film Two Days.

The Temple theater, at 456 Cherokee avenue, S. E., opens the week's program today and tomorrow with the smashing hit, "One in a Million," starring Sonja Henie, known internationally as a skating star. The supporting cast includes Don Ameche, Arline Judge and Adolph Menjou.

On Tuesday, "I'd Give My Life," a stirring melodrama that holds one in suspense until the very end, will be shown. "Champagne Waltz," with the singing star of radio and opera fame, Gladys Swarthout — supported by Fred MacMurray and Jack Oakie—will be the attraction on Wednesday and Thursday.

On Friday will be seen "Black Legion," starring Humphrey Bogart and Dick Foran. This is a powerful melodrama centering around the activities of a hooded legion. The program for the week will be completed with "Timothy's Quest," featuring Eleanore Whitney, Tom Keene and Dickie Moore.

Buck Jones in "Sundown Rider" is the attraction for Saturday.

Atlanta's Leading Picture Theaters This Week Present---

At the Capitol, starting today, will be seen "Midnight Court" with Ann Dvorak and John Litel in principal roles.

The Georgia shows today for the first time "The Soldier and the Lady." Above is a scene therefrom.

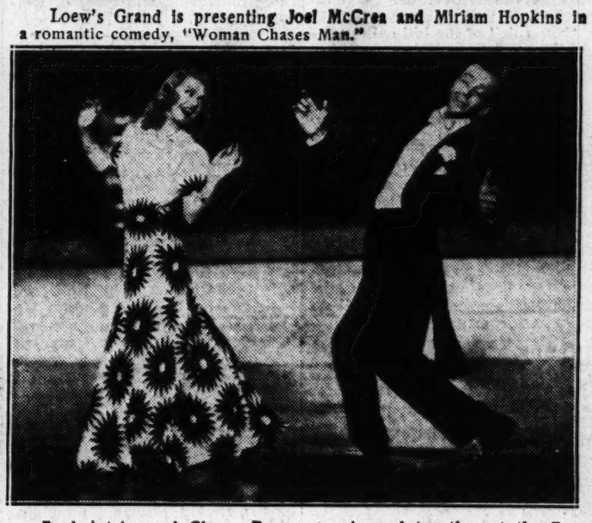

At the Rialto, now showing, is a hilarious comedy, "Dangerous Number," with Ann Sothern and Robert Young co-starred.

Loew's Grand is presenting Joel McCrea and Miriam Hopkins in a romantic comedy, "Woman Chases Man."

"Mountain Justice," with Josephine Hutchinson and George Brent, is a dramatic attraction on the Paramount screen.

Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers are teamed together at the Fox in another dance and music hit, "Shall We Dance."

'Dangerous Number' Is Rialto Hit With Robert Young, Ann Sothern

"Dangerous Number," new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production now showing at the Rialto theater, turns out to be one of the fastest moving and laugh-packed romantic comedies of recent vintage.

Robert Young and the girl who is so rapidly forging into top-ranking stardom, Ann Sothern, play the leading roles, while others featured in the cast are Reginald Owen and Cora Witherspoon. The story was originally written by Leona Dalrymple, with the scenario prepared by Carey Wilson and the picture directed by Richard Thorpe.

The story is too wild and involved for recapitulation here. It is about two young people so much in love they just must be together, despite the troubles caused by fantastic relatives and happenings that provoke a remarkable series of connubial quarrels.

The title is derived by the habit of the hero, when mad, of picking a girl's number at random in the telephone book and telephoning her for a date. The trouble this gets him into when he apparently becomes involved in a nest of gangsters is enough to make every audience laugh until they cry.

Manager Murray has added a splendid group of short subjects to his program, which will hold forth at the Rialto for the full week of seven days, including the usual Sunday performances today and closing next Thursday night.

You'll undoubtedly enjoy "Dangerous Number." That is, if you care for clever, modern romance and know how to laugh.

'Mountain Justice' at Paramount Stark Drama of the Backwoods

Rarely does a modern motion picture present such strong, stirring situations and characterizations as those in "Mountain Justice," First National melodrama costarring Josephine Hutchinson and George Brent, which opened in connection with this movie. Those who made it handled its theme and the working out of that Friday at the Paramount theater.

"Daring" is perhaps the most accurately descriptive word to use

JULES VERNE TALE FOR GEORGIA FILM

'The Soldier and the Lady' Is Picturization of 'Michael Strogoff.'

An adventure picture offering a wealth of excitement, a tender romance, some of the most spectacular scenes ever photographed and entertainment which should find favor with father, mother, sister and brother, comes to the screen of the Georgia theater today in "The Soldier and the Lady."

Besides its remarkable pageantry of drama and action, this noteworthy version of Jules Verne's mighty novel, "Michael Strogoff," introduces a new candidate for American picture laurels in the magnetic person of Anton Walbrook. The international stage and screen favorite offers a performance which skyrockets him into the ranks of our own top-notch screen celebrities.

As millions who have read Jules Verne will recall "The Soldier and the Lady," concerns itself with the perilous journey of its hero across Siberia and through hostile Tartar patrols to reach a besieged Russian army at Irkutsh with the Tsar's orders for the campaign.

Margot Grahame gives an excellent performance as the spy, who too late tries to save Walbrook from the Tartars. Elizabeth Allan is charming in the role of the friendless girl and Akim Tamiroff as the traitorous Russian leading the Tartar rebellion, turns in a brilliantly convincing piece of villainy.

Astaire and Rogers Are at Best In Smart 'Shall We Dance' at Fox

Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers have topped all their previous efforts in "Shall We Dance," RKO Radio film which opened Friday at the Fox theater. Funnier and faster than their earlier pictures, the romantic aspects and the comedy of the new musical have been definitely stressed, making for greater entertainment values, while the songs and the dance novelties that film goers have learned to expect in the Astaire-Rogers offering are present in abundance, and brilliantly conceived.

The story itself is a novelty in the team's annals, for it presents the two favorites, not as struggling unknowns, but as "top" celebrities in their respective fields, Astaire as a famous ballet dancer who goes under a Russian name, Miss Rogers as a review and musical comedy favorite. His seige to her heart runs into hilarious complications.

The sprightly plot is laid against a glittering background of Paris and New York theatrical life, punctuated with tuneful songs composed by George and Ira Gershwin and with eight spectacular dance numbers, two of these featuring America's famous and foremost ballerina, Harriet Hoctor, and three with the Astaire and Rogers duo at their sparkling best. One of these is a brilliant roller-skating number. Astaire offers a remarkable solo dance in the engine room of a giant liner as one of the real highlights of the film. Another novelty is his dance with 20 girls each disguised as Ginger Rogers.

Edward Everett Horton and Eric Blore, both of whom have appeared in former Astaire-Rogers hits, are again with the two stars in important comedy roles. Ketti Gallian and two newcomers, Jerome Cowan and William Brisbane, are excellent in the chief supporting parts, and Mark Sandrich's direction takes full advantage of the story opportunities. Pandro S. Berman, who produced the five preceding vehicles of the team, scores again with his brilliant mounting of the picture. The story is by Lee Loeb and Harold Buchman.

'LLOYDS OF LONDON' FOR TENTH STREET

Action-Packed Story of Historic Significance Booked Three Days.

Aubrey Smith and Virginia Field. "She's Dangerous," Wednesday, features Tala Birell, Cesar Romero and Walter Pidgeon. In the story, all Romero's friends warn him that Tala is dangerous, but he falls in love with her.

"When You're in Love," Thursday and Friday, is Grace Moore's newest song-filled picture. Cary Grant will be seen as her leading man. The story deals with an Australian opera star who buys an American husband in order to enter the United States.

"Murder Goes to College," Saturday, is a breezy story with Lynne Overman and Roscoe Karns leading the cast. Larry Crabbe, Marsha Hunt and Harvey Stephens are also included in the cast.

GRACE MOORE FILM FOR DEKALB FANS

'When You're in Love' Is Booked for Two Days.

Grace Moore's singing has been combined with an engaging light comedy by Robert Riskin, screen author of "It Happened One Night" and "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town," in Columbia's newest musical, "When You're in Love," which will be featured at the DeKalb tomorrow and Tuesday. Cary Grant appears opposite Miss Moore with Aline MacMahon, Henry Stephenson and Luis Alberni in support.

On Wednesday the trouble one man's bonus got him into is hilariously portrayed in "Let's Make a Million," with Edward Everette Horton shupported by Charlotte Wynters, "The Pixilated Sisters" and J. M. Kerrigan.

The thundering hoofs that dashed across the pages of history to be immortalized by the unforgettable poem of Alfred, Lord Tennyson sound again through Warner Brothers' thrillingly impressive screen version of "The Charge of the Light Brigade," which comes to the DeKalb Thursday and Friday with Errol Flynn and Olivia de Havilland in the featured roles.

'MOUNTAIN JUSTICE' AT PARAMOUNT

theme with bare fists, not kid gloves.

The picture brings home to audiences the fact that there are places and people in these United States whose codes and standards are entirely different from those of more populous communities.

Briefly, here's the story: Miss Hutchinson is a young girl from a remote hill hamlet who has had a brief interlude of life in the outside world, so that she realizes the ignorance and fanaticism and unhealthiness of her native backwoods community.

She aspires to remedy these conditions. Chiefly, she wants to establish a clinic—with the aid of a genial old doctor, Guy Kibbee, her one sympathizer—so that children may be reared under proper auspices in the benighted village.

Her cruel, ignorant father, Robert Barrat, is her chief enemy. He is set against all "furrin" ways. He does not hesitate to cuff his daughter, and a younger daughter as well, played by Marcia Mae Jones, and even to lash them with a bullwhip.

There is a final struggle. In this, fighting for her life, Miss Hutchinson as "Ruth Harkins" is obliged to kill the miserable old tyrant.

George Brent defends her in the trial that follows. He is a brilliant young attorney from New York, who loves her. But there is no chance for him or any other lawyer to win a case in that benighted village, and the girl's plea of self-defense is not accepted. She is found guilty of first-degree murder and given a long jail sentence.

By a thrilling bit of strategy, she is spirited out of jail and flown in a fast plane to an adjoining state, whose governor, familiar with all the details of the case, refuses to grant extradition papers for her return.

"Mountain Justice" is perhaps the best thing Josephine Hutchinson has done for the screen, even exceeding her notable work in "Oil for the Lamps of China" and "The Story of Louis Pasteur." Brent, too, is excellent and his work is consistently convincing.

Outstanding also is Robert Barrat's unsympathetic part as the cruel father. Elizabeth Risdon scores as his unhappy wife, as does young Marcia Mae Jones as the younger sister.

Michael Curtiz, whose last previous work was the sensational "Charge of the Light Brigade," directed "Mountain Justice" with all his usual skill.

'ON THE AVENUE' PLAYS AT FAIRFAX THEATER

RADIOEAR
ZEPHYR
Made-to-Order Hearing Aid

It is inconceivable that a hearing aid could be constructed as to be equally effective in relieving all cases of deafness.

Any more than one specified lens would suffice to correct defective eyesight of all people.

Scientists have long recognized this factor as a serious impediment. And not until the perfection of the Selex-A-Phone which accurately rates the accommodation of the ear to variable amplification characteristics, was it possible to construct a hearing aid to conform with individual requirements.

Now it is not only possible but an accomplished fact. Proven by demonstrations every day in our offices, that the made-to-order RADIOEAR with its tiny Zephyr microphone built to individual specifications has finally achieved the one thing that has baffled scientists for many years.

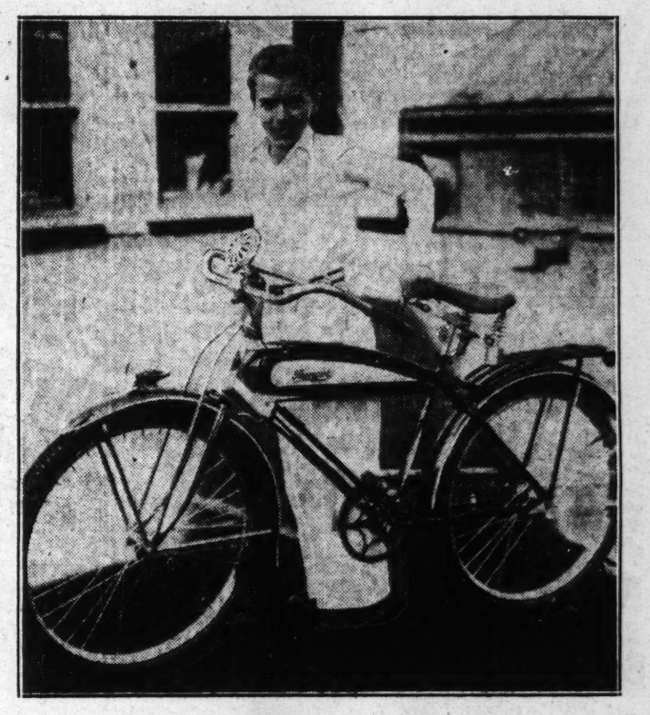

If your hearing is impaired, especially if you have tried other instruments without success, be assured that if relief is at all possible in your case it is now within your grasp—at reasonable cost.

Without obligation, we will be glad to give demonstration of the RADIOEAR in our private audition rooms to any one, at any time.

OLD IN SERVICE New IN IDEAS

Another REASON

Why More People Read The CONSTITUTION Than Any Other Atlanta Newspaper

Old-timers know, and newcomers soon learn, that The Constitution gives its readers the best of all that is NEW. Steadfastness of this policy has not only developed for The Constitution the greatest number of readers of any Atlanta newspaper, but has also brought it enviable national recognition. . . . The many editorial and mechanical changes made in the past few months exemplify its principle of progress, and the result of this ever-forward movement is evidenced by strong testimonials of its eminence among the nation's greatest newspapers.

IN THE PAST FEW MONTHS new, larger and more easily read news type replaced the old . . . Two new Sunday editorial pages were added, giving you the most complete Sunday editorial section . . . New, more complete daily woman's page . . . Wired Photos, that bring you up-to-the-minute action in pictures . . . More daily and Sunday news and feature pictures . . . Sixteen full color comic pages, four of which are numbered among the seven most popular in the nation . . . New plans of public service, among which is the 1937 County Cash Awards . . . New thought and new ideas are ever present in The Constitution, evidenced by the great number of times it is quoted in the press of the world—Time Magazine rates it twelfth among the first twenty of the nation's greatest . . . The Constitution's never-ceasing principle of progress is why its greater circulation continues upward.

VOL. LXIX., No. 338. ATLANTA, GA., SUNDAY MORNING, MAY 16, 1937.

Cars from Texas, North Carolina, Mississippi, Alabama and Louisiana were parked about the East Lake Club yesterday.

And girls from Texas, North Carolina, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana and Georgia were walking here and yon on the No. 1 course.

BABE DIDRIKSON.

The Southern Women's golf tournament begins on Monday. And the gals were arriving yesterday. There were tall, husky gals, short, stocky ones; slim, lean ones, pretty ones, homely ones, all arriving at East Lake and taking a few practice tries at the No. 2 course.

Miss Mildred (Babe) Didrikson was among those present. The Babe is here on a business venture, peddling her line of golf clubs, golf balls and the like. She's a business woman golfer, is the Babe. And doing rather well at it.

Mrs. Dave Gaut was there. If she were a man they would be speaking of "The Grand Old Man of southern golf." But, somehow, Mrs. Gaut isn't old. She's been playing golf for just about 30 years. This will be her 24th consecutive Southern Women's tournament. And she looks not one year older than she did a dozen years ago when I was watching her in another tournament.

"You know," she said yesterday, "I haven't played in Atlanta in 16 years. And it's fun being back."

She's a grand person, the sort all the golfing gals rush up to and kiss. And they mean it. Which is important.

The tournament will be augmented today by more cars with more state license tags and by more healthy young things who are eager to get going. It's easy to identify the ones who've had some golf this past winter. They are tanned. The gals from the colder climes are a bit wan in comparison.

It ought to be a good tournament. Most of the well-known feminine golf stars are here.

WHEN GREEK MEETS GREEK.

Mr. W. Wells Alexander, of our town, has come to the aid of Homer as against Alexis Kampouris, the Greek who hits homers.

It was suggested here that more people likely were interested in the Cincinnati Greek who smites homers than in Homer who smote his blooming lyre and produced the Illiad and the Odyssey.

I put the matter squarely up to my friend, Mr. George Hanjaras, scion of the Hanjaras family of Naplia, which is near Athens.

"Thees Homer," said Mr. Hanjaras, "write much stuff about theesa heel named Achilles. And about thees Grik lady who is named Helen."

"She is the lady whose face launched a thousand ships and burned the topless towers of Illium?"

"The same. And theesa Homer," said Mr. Hanjaras, "write much stuff about Scylla and Charybdis."

"The latter was a lady, an indiscreet lady, wasn't she?"

"You said it. Mucha worse than Mrs. Lott. She turn to salt. Miss Charybdis she turn into tuff rock."

Mr. Alexander had written that Homer had been batting .300 in the Classic league for a good many centuries. I put the matter squarely to Mr. Hanjaras.

"Which shall it be, Kampouris or Homer?"

"Kampouris," said Mr. Hanjaras. "He writes with a baseballa bat. And the school boys and girls, they like him better."

And so, the Greeks have a word for it. The Greek who hits homers is the winner.

THE RETURN OF THE CRACKERS.

Our Brave Lads, the Crackers, somewhat the worse for wear, will alight from Pullmans this morning and go home for breakfast.

In the afternoon they will be doing business with "Ole Hoss' Stephenson's Barons at Ponce de Leon.

They were unable to make a dent in the Memphis record which is just this—not a single foe has been able to take a series from the Chickasaws this season. The Crackers had them beat each day through eight innings. But the Chickasaws seem to have what the Crackers had last season, a finishing wallop.

The Crackers were knocked around considerably in the early innings of many games last season. But they managed to get up off the floor each time and land a knockout punch in the last couple of innings.

A deal for a pitcher may be announced this week. There is no immediate cause for alarm. The Crackers are still in there. The breaks are going against them. That's true enough.

But the pennant-winning ball club has the breaks against it and still wins. The Crackers got few breaks last season.

But this ball club will be in there yet. The Crackers need only a bit more pitching help to get back up in the better residential section of the league. They've been slumming long enough.

Last year, at this time, the Crackers had won 26 and lost 4 games. There is a little difference but there is yet time.

WHEN THE CHIPS ARE DOWN.

The chips aren't down as yet in this Southern league race. The boys have been drawing to their hands, so to speak.

Larry Gilbert, down yonder in New Orleans, drew one and got an ace. He got Nig Lipscomb, the second baseman for the Cracker nine in the past two campaigns. That will help those Pelicans.

Mr. Earl Mann, who is a very good poker player himself, hasn't drawn a card as yet. He exchanged one with New Orleans. But he hasn't discarded yet. He is trying, I think, to fill a straight and he needs maybe one card. Or two, at best.

At any rate, the chips will be down within a couple or three weeks. And the race will be to the strong.

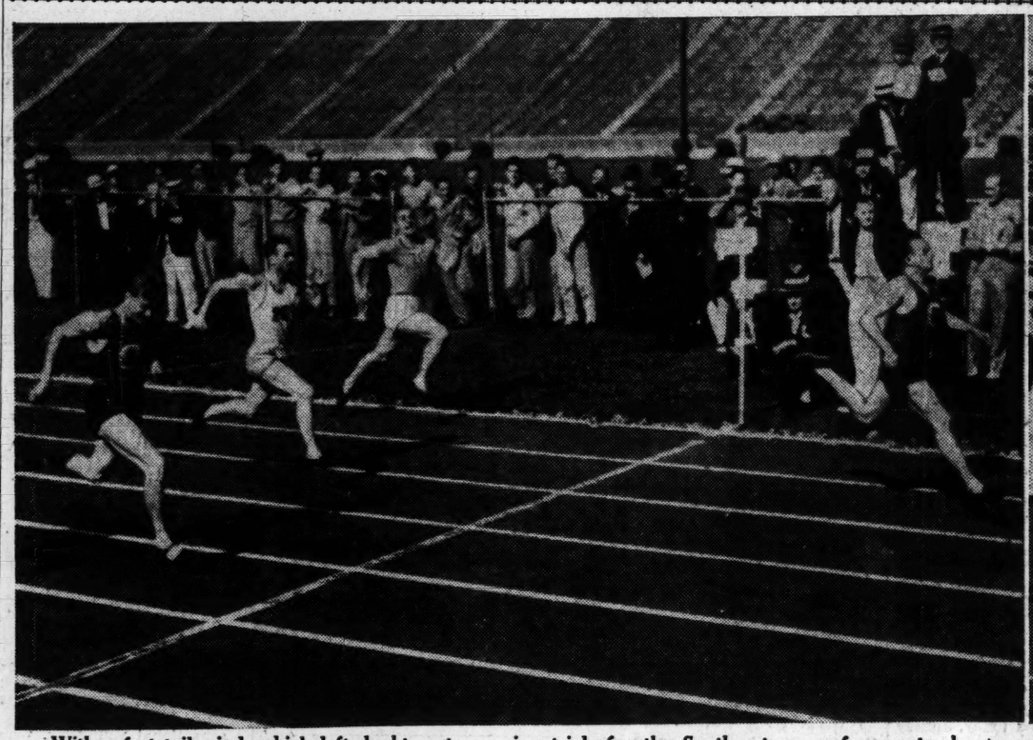

Meanwhile, once Our Nine gets some home-cooking and a bit of rest in the old easy chair, they will very likely tear those Barons to bits.

Packard Runs 'Record' Hundred---Belcher Captures 440 Dash---In Southeastern Meet

Associated Press Photos.

With a fast tail wind, which left doubt as to the recognition of his mark, Bobby Packard, University of Georgia sprinter and Olympic star, breezed in first in the 100-yard dash in qualifying trials for the Southeastern conference track carnival, setting a new record of 9.5 at Birmingham. Packard yesterday won the century, also the 220, as Georgia won the meet by scoring 65 points. Charlie Belcher, sensational Tech sophomore, right, won the 440-yard dash. Green, of Georgia, broke the discus mark, but Packard's record in the century was not allowed.

TOWNS OUTSCORES LEADING RIVALS

Aldridge Sets Mile Record; Belcher Wins 440.

By KENNETH GREGORY.

LEGION FIELD, BIRMINGHAM, Ala., May 15.—(AP)—In a sensational exhibition of track and field performances that saw six records shattered, Georgia's Bulldogs dethroned Louisiana State today as Southeastern conference champions.

The Tigers from Baton Rouge, supreme in the sport since 1931, lost the championship by 12 points, with Auburn taking third place and Kentucky fourth.

Georgia's red and black-clad athletes, featuring performances of those two Olympic stars—Forest (Spec) Towns and Bullet Bob Packard—scored 65 points to 53 for Louisiana State. Auburn collected 22 and Kentucky, whose Dave Rogan eclipsed record times in the 880 and mile runs, was fourth with 18.

Records fell in the 880, the mile, two-mile, discus, pole vault and the mile relay. Among the featured exhibitions was Rogan's 4 minutes, 16.3 seconds mile run, the fastest mark ever made by a southern athlete.

TOWNS STARS.

Individual honors went to Towns, that freckled-faced world champion hurdler from Augusta, Ga., who collected 16 points in pacing the Bulldogs to their first conference championship. Georgia, unbeaten in regular dual meets for the last two years, came through with colors flying despite a disadvantage in numbers.

Packard, who ran with the wind to chalk up a 9.5 performance in the 100-yard dash in yesterday's qualifying trials, sprinted to glory in the century and 220-yard dash and was tied with Rogan for runner-up honors in the individual scoring with 10 points each.

Packard's 9.5 was run with a gale-like wind and it was the only mark there was any doubt of receiving approval. That century time made seven records actually bettered out of the 15 on the program.

One of the best races of the meet was the victory and record hung up by Bob (Chick) Aldridge, of Georgia Tech, in the two-mile race. The yellow-shirted Tech athlete, after running stride for stride with Luke Hamilton, of Louisiana State, swept away in the last quarter to win by around 40 yards in the fast time of 9 minutes 36 seconds, 15.5 seconds faster than the mark made by John Sanders, of Louisiana State.

Arnold (Judge) Bryan, the basketball star of Louisiana State, cleared the bar at 13 feet 4 1-4 inches to shatter the 13 feet 3 1-4 inch record of Rutland, of Auburn, made in 1934.

GREENE BREAKS RECORD.

In the discus, Maurice Greene, the husky ex-fullback of Georgia, won first place with his heave of 149 feet 9 3-4 inches. The mark, made in the qualifying trials, bettered the figure of 149 feet 1-2 inch set by Baby Jack Torrance, of Louisiana State in 1934.

With Wilton Kilgore running as anchor man, Auburn's Tigers won the mile relay, climaxing event, in record-breaking time of 3 minutes 19.7 seconds. The fleet-footed Kilgore came from behind in the stretch to overtake Harry Waugh, of Tulane, and win by a slim margin. The Auburn foursome broke the 1933 record of Louisiana State of 3 minutes 21.8 seconds.

Georgia had no entries in the mile run, 440-yard dash and two miles, but in the other 12 events the Bulldogs collected points, surprising supporters with their accumulation of place points.

The Georgians got four places in the 100-yard dash, three each in the high jump and discus, and two each in the 220 and broad jump.

Points were divided between the other entries as follows:

Georgia Tech, 17; Tulane, 16; Alabama, 11; Tennessee, Vanderbilt and Mississippi State, 6 each; Mississippi, 3, and Florida, 2.

PREAKNESS WON BY WAR ADMIRAL

Derby Winner Wards Off Stretch Challenge To Nose Pompoon.

BALTIMORE, May 15.—(AP)—Refusing to give an inch in the last three-sixteenths of a mile, Samuel Riddle's War Admiral strengthened his claim to the three-year-old turf title today as he thrust back the game stretch challenge of J. H. Louchheim's Pompoon in the $50,000 Preakness.

With between 40,000 and 45,000 spectators on their feet, yelling madly, the two horses came to the finish line of the mile and three-sixteenths test separated by the narrow margin of a head to furnish one of the most exciting climaxes in the 47 years of the Pimlico classic and duplicate their order of finish in the Kentucky Derby.

The judges flashed the "photo finish" sign but it was evident that War Admiral had stood off Pompoon's great challenge to win by the narrowest of margins in the good time of 1:58 2-5 for the mile and three-sixteenths, run over a track rated as good despite yesterday's heavy rain.

War Admiral ran in front all the way after the first few yards but his margin of victory was far less than in the Derby when he easily beat Pompoon by a length and a half. Flying Scot broke in front but after battling the Riddle colt for a half-mile, he dropped back and just managed to save third money from Julia M. Loft's fast-closing Mosawtre.

War Admiral, joining a select group of thoroughbreds which won both the Derby and the Preakness, was the shortest priced winner in the history of the Pimlico classic. He paid only $2.70 for a $2 win ticket, while returning $2.30 to place and $2.40 to show. Pompoon, second choice in the wagering, paid $2.40 to place and $2.70 to show. A $2 show ticket on Flying Scot returned exactly 2 to 1 or $6.00.

BREAKS IN FRONT.

After delaying the start as he did in the Derby, War Admiral broke in front. For a few brief strides he ran second to Flying Scot but when they passed the judges' stand the first time, Charley Kurtsinger had the son of Man o' War in front and there he stayed.

Rounding the first turn, War Admiral lengthened his advantage to a length with Flying Scot and Joe W. Brown's Jewell Dorsett, only filly in the race, striving desperately to keep up with the burning pace. They had enough after the first half-mile and dropped back.

Meanwhile, Wayne Wright was settling Pompoon into stride. The Louchheim colt, fifth away from the barrier, was no better than that after the first quarter of a mile. Then he began to move up on the outside. Midway of the

Tech Beats Georgia in Final

Jackets Win In the 10th, 6 to 5

Victory Gives Tech First Series Over Bulldogs in 14 Years.

By JACK TROY.

For the first time in some 14 years, Georgia Tech yesterday won a baseball series from the University of Georgia.

It took 10 innings, but the Jackets, overcoming a Bulldog lead, scored the tieing run on an error and squeezed across the big tally on a perfect bunt by Whack Hyder.

The score of the game, a hotly contested affair which found the Jackets twice surging from behind to stave off defeat, was 6 to 5. The victory gave them the annual series, three games out of four.

Scores of other games were Tech 5, Georgia 4 (12 innings at Athens); Georgia 13, Tech 8 (at the Rose Bowl); Tech 16, Georgia 11 (at Athens).

TIED UP.

The score was all tied up going into the tenth, Tech having scored three in the sixth and one in the seventh to get back in the old ball game.

The Bulldogs drew ahead in their half of the extra inning on a squeeze play. Billy Mims beat out a perfect bunt, Jim Cavan sacrificed. Mims went to third on Carroll Thomas' infield out. Then Pitcher Culberson bunted and beat it out as Mims raced across the plate with the untieing run.

The Jackets, with their bench transformed into some dozen hard-hitting jockeys, directed verbal spurs at Culberson as they went out to save the day and the series.

Ed Jones grounded out, Mims to Stallings, who had to make a jumping catch. And with one out, Jack Nixon, of football fame, was sent in by Coach Bobby Dodd to pinch-hit for Jack Chivington, who had pitched a fine game of ball.

Nixon belted a single over short. Bill McNenney drew a base on balls. The play that enabled the Jackets to tie it up and go on to win followed. Bill Gordon lined to center and Walker let the ball bounce out of his glove. Nixon scored and McNenney stopped at third.

Joe Ebdon was intentionally passed, filling the bases, and in this crisis, Coach Dodd called Hyder the next batter and sent a messenger down to advise the third-base coach.

"They're watching me," said Dodd. "So Roy Mundorff will pass the signals. Watch him. We are going to try the squeeze, but

Pelicans Sell Hutcheson To Observe Player Limit

Other Southern Clubs Shift Rosters To Reduce List of Actives to 17.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., May 15.—(AP)—Southern Association helmsmen completed a last-minute player-juggling act tonight to get their teams chiseled down to league limits of 17 players.

It's an annual game played under league rules which require that the limit of 19 players for the first 30 days be cut at the end of that period.

Manager Larry Gilbert, of the New Orleans Pelicans, announced the sale of Outfielder Joe Hutcheson to Tulsa, of the Texas league. The sale put the team within the limit.

Memphis this week sold Southpaw Pitcher Herman Bessie to Jackson, of the Southeastern league, and Jack Calvey, Class A man, to Knoxville Smokies. Today President Tom Watkins announced the purchase of Aubrey Epps from the Pittsburgh Pirates, of the National league.

Atlanta sent Hugh Todd, a youngster, to Macon, Ga., on option and Manager Eddie Moore went off the playing list.

Manager Lance Richbourg, of the Nashville Vols, placed himself on the inactive list, released Walter Ebel, utility man, and then announced tonight acquirement of Hubert Bates, Toledo outfielder, on option. This means another must be dropped—probably Glenn Murray.

Riggs Stephenson cut off Outfielder Neal Stepp and Ralph Braun, a left-hander, from the Baron roster. Both are rookies.

The Smokies returned Shortstop Ray White to Brooklyn, which in turn sent him to Elmira, of the New York-Penn league.

The Little Rock Travelers must cut one more in addition to the release of Infielder Aubrey Graham to Rocky Mount, of the Piedmont league.

Skipper Clyde Milan, of the Chattanooga Lookouts, announced he would send Kirby Hayes, left-handed pitcher, to Jacksonville, Fla., making the team conform to the limit.

Packard's Mark Not Accepted

BIRMINGHAM, May 15.—(AP)—Wilbur Hutsell, chairman of the Southeastern conference track committee, announced tonight all records made in the annual track and field meet held here today and yesterday, would be official, with the exception of that made by Bobby Packard, of Georgia, in the 100-yard dash. Packard set a mark of 9.5 seconds in yesterday's qualifying rounds. The record is 9.6. Packard ran the century in 9.7 today.

CHICKS SWEEP SERIES, 3 TO 2

Crackers Open 4 - Game Series With Barons Here Today.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., May 15.—"Boy, we can find new ways to lose 'em," said Earl Mann today after the Chicks had beaten the Crackers 3 to 2 for their third straight one-run decision.

The Crax did find a new way. Jim Lindsey the veteran pitcher, walked in the winning run in the eighth inning when he served four straight balls to his left-handed pitching rival, Walter Stewart, with the bases full and two out.

He put two of them there himself, Andy Reese with an intentional pass, then Jack Pearson by hitting him. That shoved Coker Triplett, who had singled, to third and eventually home.

The Chicks had only one man to conquer—Buster Chatham, the best little shortstop in this man's league. Little Buster smacked a double in the second to score Eddie Moore and connected with another in the fourth and recovered from his surprise sufficiently to score on Lindsey's single. Lindsey just isn't supposed to hit.

The Chicks beat from the rear. Their run in the fourth was scored on Poco Taitt's single, a passed ball by Jim Galvin and Andy Reese's single. The second came in the fifth when Hugh Luby booted Dixie Howell's grounder. Dixie stole second and scored on Joe Grace's single to right.

Each pitcher yielded eight hits, each worked out of numerous holes, but Lindsey has only himself to blame for the licking.

Southworth Trades Chicks Out of Cellar Into Pennant Fight

TRIPLETT, TAITT MORE VALUABLE THAN WAS DUKE

Memphis Pilot Got Four Men From Mack for Nelson.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., May 15.—(AP) Billy Southworth has never done any "hoss tradin," but followers of the league-leading Memphis Chicks are beginning to believe the peppery manager could make a whale of a success at the business.

For it is beginning to look as though Southworth swapped the Chicks right out of the cellar into a pennant.

Southworth, a former St. Louis Cardinal star, took over the helm of the club last season while it was wallowing in last place.

He found several members of his team disgruntled over real and fancied ills and the poor spirit was reflected in their daily performances. The fans sensed the inner strife and never got excited about the home team that was bringing up the rear of the pennant procession.

Billy didn't try to work any miracles with the 1936 outfit. He simply waited until the season ended and then did an amazing job of wrecking the entire machinery.

Some folks thought he made a great mistake when he traded Wee Willie Duke, the popular little outfielder, to Nashville for Coaker Triplett and Poco Taitt. The ex-Vols, however, are doing a good job of making Memphis forget Willie.

Triplett is hitting .352 and Taitt .293, while Duke has a mark of .270.

Badly in need of pitching talent, Southworth stunned Chick followers by trading Lynn Nelson, the No. 1 pitcher, to the Philadelphia A's for four youngsters of uncertain qualities.

The deal was a natural, however, for the Chicks got two young infielders and two pitchers that have proved the spark plugs of the pennant drive. They are Buster Blakeney, shortstop; Jack Pearson, utility man; Carl Doyle, pitcher, and Al Benton, pitcher.

Only two players remain from the 1936 wreckage, old Andy Reese, the first baseman, and young Joe Grace, a senstional outfielder.

So, all in all, the home folks are ready to agree that Billy pulled the smartest trades in the Southern association during the winter season.

War Admiral, gallant little son of Man o' War, yesterday became the sixth horse to tag a Preakness victory on a triumph in the Kentucky Derby. And, in the picture above, one may appreciate the effort that it took. In the above picture, which was snapped as the two horses were within a scant length of the finish, Pompoon, on the rail, is leading War Admiral by a nose. When they finished, War Admiral was the winner by a head. This most stirring finish thrilled a large crowd at Baltimore. War Admiral was the shortest-priced winner in history of the Preakness.

"We'll Beat Pompoon Any Day'---Kurtsinger

Never Worried About Outcome of Race, Says War Admiral's Jockey.

By DILLON GRAHAM.

BALTIMORE, May 15.—(AP)—While the huge crowd in Pimlico's ancient rambling stands still was roaring War Admiral's name after the Man o' War colt had won the Preakness by a head today, Jockey Charlie Kurtsinger, sputtering and hopping about as the cold streams of a shower poured down on him, cried, "We'll beat Pompoon any day in the week."

The slender little blond-haired pilot from Louisville said he was never worried and thought he had the race in the bag all the way.

"Pompoon caught us on the stretch turn. But Wayne Wright had to take him inside, while I stuck to the better ground," Kurtsinger explained.

"I just clucked to War Admiral and he spurted ahead. I never used my whip. That little hoss just picks up his weight and moves forward. He likes to run in front. If someone is ahead he'll fight him for the lead and if he's challenged he just turns loose some more speed.

"He's a great race horse, better than Head Play and as good as Twenty Grand. We'll beat Pompoon, or any of the others, every time we meet them this year."

Kurtsinger rode Head Play to a Preakness victory in 1933. He won his first Kentucky Derby on Twenty Grand in 1931.

"We won handily," the "Flying Dutchman," said. "War Admiral wasn't extended. I think we could have beaten Pompoon by a bigger margin if I had urged the Admiral on. I was never afraid of Pompoon, even at the finish."

Wright, Pompoon's rider, from Rexburg, Idaho, heartily congratulated Kurtsinger.

"Pompoon just didn't have the speed at the finish to stick his head in front," he said. "I'd like to bet, though, that Pompoon will beat War Admiral this season, probably in the Belmont Stakes, June 5."

PREAKNESS WON BY WAR ADMIRAL

backstretch, still a half-mile from home, Pompoon was at his rival's flanks.

As they came out of the backstretch, Kurtsinger went to the whip in an effort to strengthen his hold on first place. But every move was matched by the Pompoon-Wright combination. War Admiral went a trifle wide heading into the home stretch, permitting Pompoon to draw almost on even terms.

NECK AND NECK.

Almost like a team they battled for three-sixteenths of a mile but the same little Riddle colt refused to give another inch. At the sixteenth pole, it appeared as if Pompoon would accomplish the seemingly impossible, but he didn't have it in him. With War Admiral's head bobbing in front they came down to the wire with the crowd on its feet and yelling madly.

Although there was little doubt that War Admiral had won, the judges posted the "photo-finish" sign, leaving the crowd in suspense for a few minutes. Then another roar went up from the packed stands as a horseshoe of roses was draped about the winner's neck.

JUDY KING WINS SEVENTH RIBBON

Knight Bachelor Takes Single Harness Honors at Atlantic City.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., May 15.—(AP)—Royal Irish, a nine-year-old chestnut gelding from Charles P. Fisher's Dixiana farms, won the $500 championships stake for saddle horses over 14.2 hands high, at the Atlantic City horse show today.

Fiery Crags, a seven-year-old bay gelding from the same stables, also won the $500 stake for saddle horses under 14.2 hands high. Their owner's daughter, Miss Mary Fisher, rode both horses in the arena.

In the event for the larger horses, Dixi Maid, a chestnut mare from Mrs. L. Victor Weil's Fair City stables, won second prize, and Golden Arrow, from the S-K-R farm, took third.

Among the smaller saddle horses, Moreland Laid, another of Mrs. Weil's chestnut mares, rated second, and Crown of Glory, a bay gelding from the Audrey's Choice Stables, third.

Miss Judy King's Knight Bachelor, a brown gelding, won its seventh blue ribbon of the show by winning the event for single harness horses not more than 14.2 hands high. The red ribbon for this event went to Clenavon Emblem, a brown mare from the Greyholme stable.

Earlier in the day Knight Bachelor had won the Nala Challenge trophy for single harness horses shown in a park rig. A Greyholme stable entry—Broompark Duke—also won second in this event.

An event for saddle ponies no higher than 14.2 hands was captured by Double Triumph, a chestnut mare owned by Mrs. Robert Nehrbas. My Choice, Mrs. Harold Sawyer's bay mare, won second, and third was awarded to Cameo, Mrs. Frederick L. Van Lennup's bay gelding.

Bill Cummings Sets 'Iron Derby' Record

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., May 15. (UP)—The greatest speeds in the history of Indianapolis motor speedway were posted today in the opening of qualifying trials for the 25th annual 500-mile race May 31.

"Wild Bill" Cummings, Indianapolis, winner of the 1934 race, set a new record of 123.445 miles an hour in his four-cylinder front-drive Boyle Special, for the 25-mile qualifying run. It gives him pole position, inside in the first row, in the lineup for the race.

While approximately 30,000 frenzied speed fans cheered, Cummings completed his tenth lap of the two and one-half mile brick oval at 125.139 miles an hour, another record. The old single lap mark of 124 miles an hour was established by Leon Duray in 1927.

Three others succeeded in bettering the 119.644 miles an hour with which Rex Mays, Glendale, Cal., won pole position last year.

Feller Rejoins Indians; Is Happy and Yet Sad

Cleveland Ace Pleased Over His Graduation; Irked Over Sore Arm Report.

CHICAGO, May 15.—(AP)—Bob Feller rejoined the Cleveland Indians today, happy over his graduation from high school, but a little irritated by reports that his strikeout right arm was more than just sore.

The sensational youngster, who left his Van Meter, Iowa, home last night soon after receiving his diploma in the biggest graduation ceremony the little high school ever had, said he could pitch Monday if Manager Steve O'Neill would let him.

"My arm is sore, all right," he admitted, "but I can throw with just as much stuff as ever. It hurts to cut loose, fast ball or curve, but I can do it. A few more days of rest and it will be all right again."

Bod said the soreness is "around the elbow"—he can't put his finger on the exact spot. It is not as painful as it was when he went back to Van Meter last Monday.

"I have rested my arm since last Monday," he explained, "and of course, it doesn't hurt much right now. I'll start throwing again Monday, but Mr. O'Neill says I'll have to take it easy until there is no more soreness. I hope that will be soon because I sure love to pitch."

The husky young Iowan admitted he felt "a little down" when he first felt the pain, but stopped worrying after O'Neill assured him other pitchers had had the same trouble and recovered from it.

Louis and Braddock May Be Suspended

N. Y. A. C. Plans Reprisal, But Bout Seems Set for Chicago, June 22.

NEW YORK, May 15.—(AP)—Few along Broadway could make any more out of the jumbled heavyweight situation today than they could before Judge Guy L. Fake announced his long-awaited decision in Newark yesterday.

It now is pretty well established that Champion James J. Braddock will fight Joe Louis in Chicago, June 22, but beyond that one guess is as good as another.

The German challenger, Max Schmeling, occupies one of the key positions. The New York state athletic commission is firmly ensconced in another.

Whether the disappointed Max Schmeling, faithfully training for the phantom June 3 title bout with Braddock, will be content to stick around for a fight with the Chicago winner, dash into the courts or take a few easy money bouts with Bob Pastor, John Henry Lewis, et al., and return to Germany in disgust, remains to be seen.

The state athletic commission is marking time until five days before June 3. Then, if Braddock doesn't appear and satisfy the commission he is ready to fight Max, it probably will suspend him. Also, Louis is likely to be threatened with a similar punishment if he goes through with the Chicago fight.

Down the Alleys

The World's champion woman duckpin bowler, Miss Ida Simmons, of Norfolk, will bowl Atlanta's highest average bowler, Walter E. Lawson, in a return match on the downtown alleys at 8 o'clock Monday evening.

Five games will be bowled, with the total pinfall determining the winner, in this special exhibition in which spectators are invited to witness at no admission charge.

Last Wednesday evening, Lawson won a five-game match from Miss Simmons by a scant margin of two pins, getting a strike in the final frame of the last game to climax a close contest as he counted nine pins to win.

It is highly probable that the scoring will be even higher Monday than the 596-to 594 score of last week. Miss Simmons will endeavor to get her "break" ball working into the pocket as she did in the South Atlantic league last season to carry an average of 125 for a large number of games.

Gaining confidence by his victory, Lawson will be a stronger opponent in Monday evening's contest and hopes to collect another win from his formidable competitor.

Bowlers will be active in league competition during the warmer months this year, with organized bowling near

Crackers Come Home Today To Open 4-Game Series With Barons

EMIL LEONARD TO HURL AGAIN ON WEDNESDAY

Beckman Goes Today; Eddie Moore Takes Self Off Active List.

By JACK TROY.

Playing good baseball but traveling in reverse because the breaks have been mostly bad, the Crackers come home after an absence of two weeks to open a four-game series with the Birmingham Barons at 3:30 o'clock this afternoon at Ponce de Leon park. A 10-game home stand is scheduled.

Paul Richards.

The first night game of the season is set for Tuesday night. Another night game will be played Friday. The ladies, will, of course, be admitted free. Night games will run on schedule thereafter.

There is no cause for alarm in the backsliding of the Crackers, according to Manager Eddie Moore, who wired yesterday that Bill Beckman will face the bold Barons in today's opener.

Moore added that he is now off the active list. "The club is going along all right," he said. "But we sure have been having bad breaks. Not worrying any as I feel sure that it cannot continue. Everybody is in good shape except Leonard and I believe he will be ready by Wednesday."

LEONARD NEEDED.

Undoubtedly, one of the chief reasons why the club has had it so tough on the recent road trip is that Leonard, league-leading pitcher, joined the halt and the lame.

Leonard injured his arm sliding and has not been able to take his regular turn. If he is ready by Wednesday, as Moore thinks, he can pitch the final game of the Baron series.

The Barons, incidentally, have won only two games in two full seasons of play at Ponce de Leon. This means that out of 22 games, Atlanta has won 20.

On the road, however, it has been a different story. The Barons cleaned up the Crackers in Rickwood field last year, winning 10 and losing only 1.

And this year, the Barons swept the three-game series. Atlanta has lost four series already. In addition to Birmingham, they have lost one by a clean sweep to Nashville and two to Memphis.

HITTING WELL.

The Crackers have been hitting well enough, but their pitching has failed. Or so it would seem.

During their road trip, the Crackers took series from New Orleans and Little Rock, but lost decisions to Birmingham and Memphis.

And so far this season, their record on the road is 7 won and 11 lost. At home—home is where the heart is, 'tis said—they have fared much better, winning 6 games and losing only 3.

An illustration of the tough luck the club has been experiencing is obtainable in the two one-run games they dropped to the Chicks, one in the tenth and the other in the ninth. They could have won both games, it seems, with proper pitching.

THREE STANDOUTS.

Real highlights of the trip include the batting of Paul Richards, Hugh Luby and Eddie Rose. The latter had hit safely in the last six games and had batted in nine runs since joining the club. He was stopped yesterday.

Richards and Luby also were stopped. Richards had batted safely in the last 20 games. Luby had hit safely in the last 18 games. Richards was used as a pinch-hitter yesterday and flied out.

The all-around play of Luby has made the fans forget Nig Lipscomb, now a Pelican.

Lipscomb will be here in an enemy uniform the latter part of this week.

The New Orleans club follows Birmingham here, playing the Crackers Thursday, Friday and Saturday. The Crackers end their stand in a three-game battle with the Knoxville Smokies next Sunday, Monday and Tuesday.

TIGERS AMASS 286.

AUBURN, Ala., May 15.—Two hundred and eighty-six points were scored by Alabama Polytechnic Institute's track and field team in four dual meets this season. The four foes of Auburn captured 218 points. The Tigers bowed to Georgia, 49-77, in their opening test of the year, and trimmed Birmingham-Southern, 82 1-2-43 1-2; Florida, 80 1-2-45 1-2, and Georgia Tech, 74-52.

A Few of the Fair Rivals--For Southern Golf Honors--At East Lake

Constitution Staff Photos—Cornett.

Estelle Page Breaks Par Again With 73

Final Practice Rounds Will Be Played Today for Southern Women's Tournament.

By ROY WHITE

Mrs. Estelle Lawson Page, of Chapel Hill, N. C., shot her third successive sub-par round Saturday morning on the No. 2 East Lake course while practicing for the 26th annual Southern Women's championship tournament next week. Mrs. Page turned in a 37-36—73, one stroke below the course record, set by Dorothy Kirby two years ago in winning the Georgia championship.

Mrs. Page climaxed her three days' practice with an eagle two on the 367-yard par four 18th hole. She has never been over par, although two rounds have not been completed, and was over par on only two holes Saturday. She had five birdies in the 73 round.

Final practice rounds will be played today, with the qualifying at 18 holes slated for Monday morning. Match play starts Tuesday and continues through Saturday.

The No. 2 course will be closed to East Lake members beginning this morning and will not be reopened until after the championship match next Saturday afternoon.

Officials of the Capital City and Druid Hills clubs have extended the courtesy of their courses to East Lake members, free of charge this week, through Friday afternoon.

More than 100 of the entries already on the battlefront played over the No. 2 course Saturday morning, but only Mrs. Page turned in a card with any good scoring on it. A majority of the entries played two and often three shots from difficult angles and various ranges, where they were not content with the original shot.

KIRBY PLAYS.

Dorothy Kirby, Georgia's sensational young champion for the past two years, played with Marion Miley, Jane Cothran and Kathryn Hemphill, in probably the lowest scoring foursome of the day. And at least a couple of the semi-finalists may be taken from Saturday's practice foursome.

And with a near-record entry already recorded and others expected today and Monday morning, the tournament promises to be the toughest in the history of southern golf.

Three of the four semi-finalists in the National Women's tourney last year, and 30 others with handicaps of six and under already are on the scene ready to "shoot the works" next week.

The 1937 Southern, with a large group of youngsters, appears as strong as the National, and certainly the strongest list of competitors ever entered in the south.

Six former Southern champions, Mrs. Mark McGarry, St. Petersburg, 1936; Mrs. George Brantley, Jacksonville, Fla., 1935; Miss Betty Jameson, San Antonio, 1934; Mrs. Ben Fitzhugh, Vicksburg, Miss., 1932; Mrs. David Gaut, Memphis, Tenn., 1930, 1923, 1921 and 1920, and Mrs. Helen Dozier Lowndes, of Columbus, Ga., will battle for the 1937 crown.

ANOTHER FOURSOME.

Another practice foursome Saturday included Miss Louise Cagle, Mrs. Guy Butler, Mrs. Sam Israel and Mrs. Clarence Elsas, the latter two of New Orleans. Mrs. Albert Donnaud, Mrs. A. J. Kaiser and Mrs. Edgar Pearson, of Hous-

Golfers Break Two Marks In Bogey

East Lake's golfers with the practice rounds for the southern women's tournament next week included, set two new records Saturday afternoon, on the two courses.

The old bogey entry of 137 was beaten by four as 141 participated in the most successful bogey ever held at East Lake and 15 players shared top prize.

The other record was 350 golfers during the day, which surpassed all previous Saturday play. And both courses were jammed almost to capacity all day, particularly during the afternoon.

Those players dividing first prize in the bogey were E. R. Neely. F. A. Lyons, H. D. Chenault, Dr. A. O. Linch, K. A. Stephenson, Dr. C. L. Douglas, R. P. Fraser, J. C. Mergendoller. A. C. Bromberg. W. R. Moore, T. A. Martin. C. Funk. Dewey Bowen, C. C. Gray and L. C. Shults.

The winning score was 74, and the winners were new to the front ranks of bogey play for the most part.

And to add to the major records, more players shared second place than ever before when 32 players finished only one stroke away from the winners.

The booby prize was won by Lee Renfroe.

Dogfite Slated This Afternoon

The weekly East Lake dogfite will be played at 1:30 o'clock this afternoon on the No. 1 course. Entries must be in the golf shop by 1 o'clock.

The No. 2 course will be closed to members beginning this morning through next Saturday afternoon.

Dunlap Captures Dogwood Tourney

Jim Dunlap won the Capital City dogwood tournament with a 2-1 victory over Charlie Dannals Jr., the medalist, Saturday afternoon. The tourney has extended over a period of several weeks.

Dr. Cy Strickler Jr., and Charlie Black Jr., with 69's, won low scor-

Golf Five Starts Practice This Week

ATHENS, Ga., May 15.—Coach Rex Enright calls out his University of Georgia basketball candidates Monday night for a two weeks' session faced with the task of revising his offense and defense due to the abolishment of the center jump. Drills will be held nightly at Woodruff Hall.

West End Shooters Seek Medals Today

Medals will be awarded to high scorers in the monthly medal shoot at the West End Gun Club today. High gun winners in Class A, B and C will receive a prize as token of victory in their respective class.

Team shoots will be a feature of the afternoon program, with teams being selected from among those present. This will afford an excellent opportunity for shooters to practice for the coming championship events.

Shooters and spectators are urged to attend this event.

Junior Net Honors Won by Armstrong

DOUGLAS, Ga., May 15.—(AP)—Armstrong Junior College of Savannah won the Georgia Junior College tennis championship here today, defeating South Georgia College, 4 to 1, in the finals.

The Armstrong victory relegated South Georgia to a secondary place for the first time in three years.

Tyre, of Armstrong, defeated Harper, 1-6, 6-3, 6-3; DuPont, of Armstrong, whipped Harris, 6-3, 7-5; Morgan defeated Henderson, of South Georgia, 6-2, 6-1, and Cranman defeated Byrd, of South Georgia, 6-2, 6-3.

Sleep won the host team's only match by stopping Lanier, 6-4, 6-2.

Old Mack's Time Bomb Is Exploding Too Soon

A's' Leader Was Building for '38, But Mexico Did Something to His Lads.

NEW YORK, May 15.—(UP)—Is Senor Cornelius McGillicuddy's time bomb exploding a year too soon? That's what the perplexed baseball world is asking as ancient Connie's Athletics provide the big early-season surprise of 1937.

"We're building for '38," the 74-year-old Connie Mack told reporters somewhat apologetically down at Mexico City, where he had gathered his diamond debris for spring training. "And, by ginger! watch our smoke next year."

But apparently something happened to Senor McGillicuddy's hodge-podge in the land of the jumping bean. Perhaps Mexico City's high, dry altitude made it jell quicker than expected. Or perhaps Chef Tio Tomaso's succulent and peppery cooking made the club red hot. Anyway, the nondescript Philadelphians stepped out in the opening game on April 19 and beat Washington, 4-3. And they've been playing like flag contenders ever since. Just imagine Mack's mavericks winning four out of five from the Senators, whom some of the experts had picked for the pennant, and taking three straight from Mickey Cochrane's high-touted Tigers.

Tio Tomaso certainly gave them the old pepper, and their fighting spirit has amazed opponents. Remember—in that opening contest at Washington, Rookie Catcher Earl Brucker broke up the game with a double in the tenth. And on April 24, Jack Rothrock's pinch single in the ninth registered the two winning runs over the Senators. On May 5, they nosed out the White Sox, 7-6, with a six-run rally in the eighth. And on the very next day, they again downed the Pale Hose, 3-1, by scoring thrice in the eighth. On May 9, a cluster of six runs in the seventh gave them a 9-8 win over the Tigers.

Meanwhile, novice flingers like Almon Williams, George Caster, Luther Thomas and Edgar Smith have been performing like seasoned major league moundmen. And holdovers like Harry Kelley and George Tubberville helped a bit, too.

Hofferth Increases Batting Lead in Southern With Mark of .489

CLARENCE BLAIR NEXT WITH .486; CHAPMAN THIRD

Crackers Lead in Team Batting; Leonard Tops Pitchers With 4 Wins.

The rookie catcher from Nashville, Stuart Hofferth, shows no signs of being a mere flash in the pan. Smashing out 10 hits, including two doubles and a triple out of 20 trips to the plate, Hofferth raised his average from .480 to .489 and held fast to his lead among Southern league batters, according to figures released by the Howe News Bureau.

Clarence Blair, Knoxville second baseman, is enjoying his greatest season of hitting thus far. "Footsie" is only trailing Hofferth by three points and his .486 average is far ahead of his nearest competitor.

Calvin Chapman, Nashville third baseman, is finding Southern pitching very much to his liking and his average has not varied over six points since the first week of play. His mark is now .417.

Milton Galatzer and Tommy Irwin, both of New Orleans, are going great. Galatzer has hit safely one or more times in his last 14 games, which enabled him to raise his average to .411, while Irwin tacked on 13 points and climbed up to .400, while holding the lead in total number of hits with 40.

Henry Oana, of Knoxville, added one more homer during the week and leads with five. Taft Wright, of Chattanooga, has batted in 25 runs.

Two Atlanta Cracker players are engaged in consecutive game hitting streaks. Paul Richards, catcher, has hit safely in his last 19 games, while Luby, second baseman, has turned the trick in his last 17.

Atlanta leads in team batting with .299 and Little Rock in fielding with .978. Chattanooga has made 29 double plays.

Emil Leonard, Cracker ace, suffering from a stiff shoulder incurred while sliding into a base, made one start during the week and was removed without getting a decision. He is still leading the pitchers with four won and no losses.

Bobby Coombs and Hugh Casey, both of Birmingham, have each won three games without being defeated. Benton, of Memphis, has won four while losing one.

SOUTHERN ASSOCIATION AVERAGES INCLUDE THURSDAY'S GAMES.

Whenever the talk swings to horses, invariably somebody comes up with the question, "Do horses enjoy being shown, or racing, or playing polo? Do they have any competitive spirit?"

This column is firmly convinced that horses do have this competitive spirit, and that the successful and outstanding ones, whether they be running horses, jumpers, polo ponies or show stock, have the same sort of spirit so necessary for an outstanding athlete.

One of the best examples we have seen was in the Atlanta show last week. We had seen this particular horse working for several weeks prior to the show, and his way of going was just mediocre. As a matter of fact, it was only after much persuasion that the owner would enter his mount in the show. Yet, when this horse hit the ring in completely with five others, he was completely changed. He went through his paces without a fault and there was a "bloom" on him that made him stand out so far above the rest of the class that even the casual spectator realized he was the winner before the judge pinned the ribbons.

While on the subject of competitive spirit, there are a young brother and sister in this town who never fail to excite the most favorable comment whenever they show, for their sportsmanlike conduct in and out of the ring. Their names appear in the winning columns more often than not, but whether they win or lose, there is never any crabbing about the judge or his decisions. Showing horses is one of their main joys in life and they are justly very proud of their two fine mounts, but they have the attitude that it is a game and can take their victories and defeats alike with a good grace.

News has been received that Miss Susanne Ferst was most successful in the Washington, D. C., show, taking the blue ribbon in the novice amateur clas, and winning several place ribbons in other classes.

With the Columbus show ended, Atlanta and Georgia exhibitors will wind up the spring season with the Macon and Greenville, S. C., shows. Macon will have its event Saturday afternoon and evening, May 21. With a new ring and new stabling accommodations Macon is looking forward to a most successful show.

Greenville, S. C., has scheduled its annual show for June 9 and 10. Cape Grant, manager of the famous Spindletop stables, in Texas, will judge the saddle classes. Greenville always puts on an outstanding event, and Georgia owners are enthusiastic about making this affair. Atlantans will be particularly interested in watching the progress of little Miss Margaret McKissack, Greenville girl, who won so much admiration for her fine riding and victories in the three-gaited stake and good hands events in Atlanta.

There has been some discussion of a new building to be erected at the fair grounds, and it is hoped that it will be made adaptable for an indoor horse show. A number of horse lovers in this section would like to see an indoor Atlanta show, to be held in the fall, so that it could be tied in with the big Nashville and Louisville shows, thus attracting more out-of-town competition.

Roy Garrett Twirls Softball No-Hitter

Roy Garrett, star hurler for the College Park Aces softball team, pitched a no-hit game last night against the Dutch Oven Bakeries, striking out 20 men in seven innings and winning, 9-0.

Twenty-two men faced Garrett, and 20 of them fanned. One reached first on an error, and another popped out. The young right-hander was mixing a curve ball with his fast one to great advantage.

Big League Leads Sliced as Yanks Beat A's and Cards Trip Pirates

LEFTY GRISSOM LIMITS CHICAGO TO TWO BINGLES

Dean's Hurling Saves Cards; Giants and Phils Split Two.

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

The St. Louis Cardinals rallied in the ninth inning yesterday to beat Pittsburgh, 4 to 2, before 13,000 fans and reduce the Pirates' lead in the National league pennant race to two and one-half games.

A fumble by young Lee Handley at second base started the Cards on a two-run spree in the final frame.

The decision was a tough one for Pitcher Bill Swift, who held the Cardinals to five hits.

Dizzy Dean, chased to the showers Friday by the Pirates' bats, returned in the ninth to halt a threatening rally. Harrell, who had shown signs of wobbling, got two men on the bases with one out, and Dean was rushed in. He walked Pinch Hitter Lucas, filling the stations, but caused Jensen to fly out to center and Paul Waner to line to Moore.

TODD HITS AGAIN.

Singles by Gus Suhr and Al Todd, with an infield out, gave the Pirates a run in the second. A walk, sacrifice and single by Arky Vaughan gave them their other marker in the sixth. It was the 16th consecutive game in which Catcher Todd had hit safely.

The Giants and Phillies split the season's first double-header, with arguments between umpires and various members of both teams providing more action than the games themselves.

The Phils won the opener 6 to 2 with a four-run blast when fat Freddy Fitzsimmons weakened in the eighth inning.

The Giants took the nightcap 2 to 1 when Kiddo Davis broke up the affair with a two-bagger to left, bringing in Dick Bartell from third base with the winning run. Until that point, Hal Schumacher and Wayne Lamaster, the Phils' rookie southpaw star, had hooked up in a tight twirling duel.

Behind Lefty Lee Grissom's two-hit hurling, the Cincinnati Reds won their first game of the season at home and climbed out of the National league cellar by defeating Chicago 3 to 2.

For six innings, only one Cub, Hack, reached first on a walk in the second frame.

Brooklyn at Boston was postponed on account of rain.

Wrestler Failed To Rise; Was Dead

CORINTH, Miss., May 15.—(AP) Eddie Baker, 36, wrestler, failed to budge from the canvas after he had been pinned by his opponent, Roy Welsh, of Jackson, Tenn., here last night.

Eight hundred fans gathered for the weekly American Legion wrestling show, shouted for the match to continue. A physician was called to the ring.

He found that Baker was dead.

Terry Protests Game With Phils

NEW YORK, May 14.—(AP) Manager Bill Terry, of the Giants, notified umpires today that he was playing the second game of a double-header with the Phillies under protest.

He made the official protest after umpires refused to allow his complaint that the pitching motion of Wayne Lamaster, Phils' left-hand rookie, constituted a balk almost every time he threw the ball.

His protest and that of Giant players climaxed an afternoon full of complaints at the Polo Grounds. In the first game, Manager Jimmy Wilson rowed repeatedly with the umpires and his pitcher, Bucky Walters, was finally expelled from the game for an argument.

JOHNSON SOCKS HOMER WITH 2 MATES ON BASE

Yanks Near Top; Chisox, Senators and Browns Win.

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

The New York Yankees climbed back into second place in the American league yesterday by nosing out the league-leading Athletcs, 6 to 5, with the aid of Pat Malone's relief pitching and a three-run triple by Rookie Tom Henrich.

For a few moments in the eighth inning, when Bob Johnson belted a homer with two mates on base, it appeared that Monte Pearson, the Yanks' starting pitcher, was due to lose his first game in four starts, but "Old Blub" Malone was summoned from the bull pen to end the uprising with two strikeouts and a pop-up.

The victory, achieved off Harry Kelley, who lasted until the Yanks' five-run uprising in the third frame, was the New Yorkers' eleventh in 19 starts and advanced them over the Cleveland Indians and only a slim half-game back of the A's.

Monty Stratton, towering White Sox right-hander, held the Cleveland Indians to three singles to achieve his fourth victory and his second shutout of the season when Chicago won the first game of the series, 6 to 0.

SOCK GALEHOUSE.

The Sox backed up Stratton's sparkling hurling with a ten-hit attack on Dennis Galehouse. Hal Trosky and Odell Hale nicked Stratton for hits in the fifth inning and Lyn Lary got one in the ninth. No other Indian reached first base, only one reached second and none got as far as third.

Stratton became the first American league pitcher to register two shutouts this season.

A home run by Al Simmons broke a tie in the eighth inning and gave Washington a 5-to-4 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

The game was a see-saw battle for seven innings between Pitchers Buck Newsom and Lefty Grove. Newsom gave up eight hits before he was lifted for a pinch hitter. Pete Appleton hurled the last two innings and got credit for the win.

HILL BA''S HARD.

Grove was touched for a dozen hits, including a triple and two singles by Jess Hill. Jimmy Foxx and Pinkey Higgins hit home runs for Boston in the fourth inning.

BROWNS WIN.

Two big innings liberally sprinkled with extra-base hits paved the way for the second successive St. Louis Browns' victory over the Detroit Tigers. The score was 11 to 5.

Driving Vic Sorrell from the box in the fourth with a four-run barrage, the Brownies continued their vicious assault on Elden Auker and tallied another score. Harry Davis, Joe Vosmik, Harlond Clift and Manager Rogers Hornsby belted doubles.

Again in the fifth the Browns' heavy artillery functioned just as effectively and added five more markers. Benny Huffman got a double in this frame.

Mars Shield Takes 63d Kentucky Oaks

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 15.—(AP)—In a driving stretch finish Mars Shield, the favored daughter of the Milky Way Farms, captured the 63d running of the $5,000 added Kentucky Oaks at Churchill Downs today.

Before 30,000 screaming fans, the brown three-year-old filly owned by Mrs. Ethel V. Mars, swung wide on the last turn and beat her way from seventh place to win by a length and a half in 1:53 2-5.

Mrs. Shield paid $3.80 to win; $3.40 to place and $3.60 to show.

Shatterproof, which took the lead at the halfway mark of the mile and an eighth course, was second and Alkit, a 40-to-1 shot owned by J. H. Shirvin, was third.

Others finishing were Miney, Maryvito, Exclaim, Recussion, Gin Daisy and Miss Bonnie.

Five Share Prize In Ansley Bogey

D. G. Hix, H. C. Jones, T. M. Smith, Johnny Dodd and O. S. Ferguson divided first prize Saturday afternoon in the weekly blind bogey on the Ansley Park course. The winning scores were 76. J. M. Ward won the booby prize.

Ansley Park golfers completed all matches in the losers' pay dinner tournament and enjoyed the dinner Saturday night at the club.

PURPLES CLOSE G. I. A. A. SEASON WITH SMITHIES

Lanier Nine Holds Lead as Prep Season Ends.

By ROY WHITE.

Tech High and Boys' High will close Atlanta's annual prep baseball season at 3 o'clock Tuesday afternoon. The game is tentatively scheduled for Ponce de Leon park. It will be the final game of the Big Eight schedule, but Tech High has three postponed games yet to be played.

Lanier High, of Macon, the newest entry, tops the standings with 10 games won and three lost, with Tech High and the Monroe Aggies tied for second place with seven won and three defeats each.

G. M. A. vs. MONROE.

In the other Tuesday games, G. M. A. plays at Monroe, Commercial at Lanier, and Columbus High at Columbus Industrial.

Should Boys' High beat Tech High Tuesday, Lanier will have the inside track and force Monroe to win its three postponed games. A Tech High victory will leave both the Smithies and Aggies still in the running, provided the postponed games are won.

Boys' High has fourth place cinched, with Commercial, Columbus Industrial, G. M. A. and Columbus High trailing in order.

Kirkland, Columbus outfielder, and all-state basketball center for two years, is the league's leading hitter. He has been outstanding all season though his team has won only one game.

GOOD PITCHING.

Pitchers have dominated, and every team except Columbus High boasts of at least one capable hurler.

Captain Bob Smith, who beat Tech High in the first round, will again be on the mound for the Purples, while Souter, who was knocked out by Lanier Friday afternoon at Glenn field, will go back into the box for the Smithies.

NEW YORK, May 15.—(AP)—A handful of industrials and rails managed to gain ground moderately on today's stock market, but before the close the majority yielded a large part of their gains. Steels, motors, utilities and tobaccos were backward throughout.

Transfers of 343,560 shares compared with 285,390 last Saturday. With the exception of the latter date it was the smallest turnover since June of last year. The Associated Press average of 60 stocks ended with an advance of .2 of a point at 66.3.

Friendliness toward the carriers was in the face of a contra-seasonal drop in last week's freight loadings. At the same time observers of this field believed the recession was only temporary with an upturn likely later in the month.

Shares of Homestake Mining got up 5 points at 352. Up fractions to 1 or so were Southern Railway at 36 5-8, Pennsylvania 43, Union Pacific 145, Southern Pacific 56 1-4, Northern Pacific, 33 3-4; Baltimore & Ohio 32 1-4, Kennecott 54, International Nickel 59, Briggs Mfg. 42 5-8, Paramount 19 5-8, Republic Steel 34 1-8, American Steel Foundries 51 1-2, Yellow Truck 21 7-8, Loew's 77, Union Carbide 100, Goodyear 37 1-2, Goodrich 40 1-2 and Barnsdall 25 3-4.

On the downside were United States Steel at 95, General Motors 55, Chrysler 109, American Telephone 164, Deere 126, Firestone 33 1-4, DuPont 154, Consolidated Edison 35 3-8, Cerro de Pasco 62, Douglas Aircraft 49 1-8 and Western Union 56 3-4. AVERAGE PRICE.
NEW ORLEANS, May 15.—(AP)—The average price of middling cotton today at 10 southern spot markets was 13.04 cents a pound. The average price for the past 30 days was 13.31 cents a pound.

ATLANTA SPOT COTTON.
Atlanta spot cotton closed steady, middling f. o. b. 13.75.

NEW ORLEANS, May 15.—(AP) Cotton advanced slightly in today's abbreviated session in quiet trading. Final prices were steady and showed net gains of 7 to 9 points.

Selling pressure was lacking and a moderate demand was influenced by reports of cooler weather over the belt. Most traders took the view that the lower temperatures may prove harmful to the crop by preventing proper germination of the seed.

The weather appeared to be the only news that affected the market one way or the other. The foreign incentive was lacking, due to the Whitsuntide holiday in Liverpool. Spot market continued quiet, one report saying demand was slightly better, but that the quality of the offerings was of low grade and restricted business.

July contracts closed at 12.67; October 12.57; January 12.69, and March 12.71. Spots were 9 points higher with middling at New Orleans selling at 13.07.

Traders studied with interest a Washington report that the drying up of demand for loan cotton may bring about a change in policy of the Commodity Credit Corporation. Only 70 bales of the loan cotton were released during the week. This was attributed to the quality of the staple now held which is said to be below the average.

The long range forecast was about as expected and failed to stimulate the market either way.

A report from Texas said the crop there was retarded by unseasonably cool weather and deficiency of top-soil moisture. The condition was relieved to some extent, the report said, by spotting rains during the past week.

Port receipts 4,673; for week 4,673; for season 6,589,483. Exports 7,616; for week 7,616; for season 5,177,851. Port stocks 1,494,836. Stocks on shipboard at New Orleans, Galveston and Houston 56,873; last year 65,711. Spot sales at southern markets 3,210; last year 8,214.

NEW YORK COTTON GAINS MODERATELY

NEW YORK, May 15.—(AP)—Further moderate advances were registered in cotton today on a small trade and foreign demand while offerings were light. July, which had sold up to 12.84, closed at 12.76, with final prices 8 to 14 points net higher.

Sugar and Coffee.

SUGAR.

NEW YORK, May 15.—Raw sugar was unchanged today at 3.38 for spots. No sales were reported, although it was believed refiners would pay this price for sugar in suitable positions. These were held at 3.40.

Futures were quiet but in absence of any aggressive selling prices were steadier. No. 3 contracts closed 1 to 2 points higher with sales of 750 tons. No. 4 contracts closed ½ to 1½ points higher with July selling from $1.14½ to $1.16½ and September $1.17½ to $1.19½, with final prices at about the best. Sales were 2,400 tons.

The range follows:

	High.	Low.	Last.
May			2.48b
July	2.48	2.47	2.48b
September	2.47	2.46	2.46b
November			2.47n
January			2.38b
March			2.39b

b-Bid; n-nominal.

Refined was unchanged at 4.80 for fine granulated with only a light inquiry reported.

COFFEE.

NEW YORK, May 15.—Coffee advanced moderately today in quiet trading, with covering and trade buying the main features.

Considered favorable was a Brazilian cable which said the national coffee department has definitely fixed a 70 per cent sacrifice quota.

Santos opened 3 higher and closed 1 to 6 higher; sales were 8,500. The Rio opened 5 higher and closed 2 to 4 higher; sales 1,250. Closing quotations: Santos, May 11.43, July 10.73, September 10.44, December 10.32, March 10.22, May 10.12; Rio, May 7.01, July 7.02, September 7.00, December 6.96, March 6.92.

Spot market quiet but steady. Santos 4s 11¾; Rio 7s 9¼. Cost and freight offerings included Santos 4s for prompt shipment at from 11.30 to 11.90.

A new type of painters' canvas, said to be more durable than the ordinary variety, has been developed from flax by the Northern Ireland Linen Research Association.

Fishing Village Is Setting for Exciting New Serial Story

The Abandoned Lighthouse

By W. BOYCE MORGAN

"YOU CAN SEE THE LIGHT OUT THERE FLICKER AND GO OUT!"

INSTALLMENT I.

When Perry Thompson's father and mother went to Europe, they left Perry with his Uncle John, who lived in Higgs Harbor. It was a good arrangement from his parents' point of view, but Perry did not think so much of it.

Higgs Harbor was a run-down little fishing village on the coast, and it was about as unlively a place as a 15-year-old boy could well imagine. In fact, it seemed to Perry that everybody in the town was old, including his Uncle John. The only boy of his own age with whom he was acquainted there was Lig Shanks, and Lig wasn't very exciting.

But knowing Lig had one big advantage: his father ran the local drug store, which made it easy and inexpensive to get ice cream sodas. In fact, Lig made them himself, and sometimes the mixture that he and Perry put away were almost solid ice cream.

They had just completed work on a pair of these tasty beverages on afternoon in mid-June, when Lig swung around on his stool, pushed the glass away with a sigh of satisfaction, and regarded Perry lazily.

"Heard the news?" he inquired.

Perry shook his head. The week he had already spent in Higgs Harbor made it difficult for him to believe that any news Lig might have could be really important.

"Some woman writer with a trailer is camping out by the old lighthouse on Egg Head."

Perry gave a final suck on his soda straw. "Why would anybody want to camp out there?" he inquired.

"It appears nobody knows," Lig replied. "She just drove out there without saying aye, yes, or no to anybody, and settled down. Keeps house in the trailer and spends most of her time writing. Folks think maybe she's touched in the head."

Perry grinned to himself. He knew that Higgs Harbor folks were apt to think all outsiders were "touched in the head," particularly the city people who occupied the near-by summer cottages during July and August.

"Well, she certainly picked a lonesome spot," he commented. "What's she doing, writing about the old lighthouse?"

Lig sniffed scornfully. "Why'd anybody want to write about that old wreck?" he inquired.

Perry stretched and leaned back against the counter. "Well, honest, now, Lig, if you were going to write up anything around Higgs Harbor, you'd just about have to pick on the lighthouse—unless you just wanted to write about rocks and ocean. Maybe the harbor was interesting in the old days, but it isn't much now."

Lig looked somewhat resentful. "I don't see why she has to come here at all to do her writing. Nobody asked her."

Perry laughed. "I guess she's not hurting anybody," he said. Lig looked unconvinced, and shook his head.

"You never can tell."

For a minute or two neither boy spoke. Then Perry showed the first real sign of life he had displayed all day.

"You know, Lig," he began, "I've always wanted to explore that old lighthouse. Uncle John was telling me once that there is quite a story connected with it. Wasn't there a murder out there, or something, fifty or sixty years ago? And a bad shipwreck? Seems to me it was something like that."

Lig didn't appear to be very interested. "That's probably just one of Old Sol's stories," he said.

"Old Sol?" Perry repeated. "He's the old fisherman who lives in that lonely shack just this side of Egg Head, isn't he?"

Lig nodded. "He's touched in the head, I guess."

Perry laughed, and climbed down from his stool. "What do you say we wander out there and see Old Sol?" he suggested. "I'd like to do something this afternoon besides just sit around."

"What do you want to be going out there for?" Lig demanded illhumoredly.

"Because there's nothing else to do, and if I don't do something, I'll pop!" Perry retorted. He started for the door, saying, "Come on. If you don't, I'll go by myself."

Lig didn't move until Perry had almost reached the door. Then he got slowly to his feet, called to his father in the back of the store that he was "going out for a spell," and followed Perry without enthusiasm.

Side by side, they walked down the one main street of the town toward the little harbor. But before they reached the sagging wharves, they turned off down a dingy side street which soon became an unpaved road. In five minutes they were approaching the rocky shore, and could hear the steady pound of the waves on the beach.

Egg Head, which they were approaching, was a long and rugged promontory of solid rock which stuck out into the ocean just south of the village and the harbor. In the old sailing vessel days, when the town had been prosperous, a lighthouse had marked the rocky point.

For years now it had been abandoned, but it still stood far out on the end of Egg Head. The stones of which it was built were gray and weatherbeaten from many storms, and the glass in its tower had long since disappeared. Occasionally summer people visited it, and now and then a picnic lunch was eaten in the shadow of its walls, but for the most part, the rough and narrow road which ran along the top of Egg Head was forbidding enough to keep sightseers away.

Perry and Lig paused and gazed out at the lighthouse before descending to the stony beach. The afternoon sun was shining brightly, but its beams failed to add a single splash of color to the dead gray of the circular stone building. It stood stark and alone on its rocky point, no longer warning ships away from the rocks, but seemingly warning visitors not to approach it from the land.

To Be Continued Next Week.

Musician's Daughter Sends Three Riddles With Musical Flavor

The Riddle Man has found that boys and girls are not the only ones who like riddles. This week he is printing three original riddles sent in by Mrs. Nellie Chapman. She is the daughter of a musician, and these riddles have a musical flavor. The last riddle this week was sent in by an adult, too, but no name was signed.

1. What is the most appropriate residence for a musician?
2. Why is a musician the most healthy of all human beings?
3. Why is a pianist like a carpenter?
4. Little boy red jacket, whither away?
   To the house of the ivory portals I stray.
   Say will you come back, little redcoat, again?
   My bones will come back but my flesh will remain.

"A batch of jokes I sent to the editors were rejected as no good, but when I threw them in the stove the fire just roared."

HIS NOTES ARE GOOD.

"Is the living he makes on a sound basis?"

"You bet it is. He beats the bass drum in a band."

WHAT DID YOU LEARN TODAY?

"WELL Mary, what did you learn at school today?"

This is one of those questions which men and women seem to like to ask of boys and girls. And often it's a pretty hard question to answer. It's not easy to describe just what you have learned in any one day at school.

But just now you are approaching the end of a whole term in school, and if somebody asks you, "What did you learn in school this year?" you certainly should be able to give a good answer. It's much easier to tell what you have learned over a number of months than the little bit you learn in any one day.

Stop for a moment, think back to last September, and just remember all the things this year in school has meant to you. Then you will have a better idea of the value of your education. And on some of the days when studying seems hard, it will be just that much easier and more pleasant because you realize what it means over a long period of time.

Trunk Game From Ancient France Is a Real Test for Your Memory

Long before there were any railroads in France, the French people traveled in coaches drawn by four and sometimes by six horses. A trip which we think very short today took a long time in those days, so it was necessary to have trunks wherever they went. It was from this custom that "The Trunk" game started.

The game has been brought to some parts of this country, but it is not known here as widely as it is across the sea.

It may be played by any number, but it is better not to have more than 10 or 12. The players arrange themselves in a row, either standing or sitting.

The first in line starts by saying, "I am going away tomorrow and in my trunk I have put my coat." The second person repeats, saying, "I am going away tomorrow and in my trunk I have put my coat and my suit." The third person in line also repeats, and adds one more article, such as a hat, a cap, or anything that would be taken on a long trip. Each person must repeat all the articles named by the others in line in their right order.

Game Gets Tough.

By the time six or seven people have told what they are taking in their trunks, it begins to be hard to remember the list and the order in which it was named. As soon as someone fails to repeat it properly, he or she must drop out of line. It is only by paying the closest attention that those in line, especially those who are beyond the fifth or sixth position, will be able to name the list in the correct order.

Those who are unable to repeat correctly the list of articles going in the trunk should be made to pay a forfeit. The winner of the game is the one who is able to repeat the longest list in its right order, and as a reward he should be allowed to choose the forfeit to be paid by those who had to drop out.

Because of the close attention necessary while it is being played, "The Trunk" is a game that trains the memory and keeps the players wide awake.

Wool From Old Socks And Sweaters Makes Unusual Tufted Rug

By KATHERINE HOUISON.

You can use discarded sweaters, ski socks, or any worn knitted articles for this unusual rug.

If your wool is heavy, cut a strip of cardboard about two inches wide, but for finer wool cut it an inch or inch and a half wide. Now unravel your wool and wind about 18 strands over the cardboard as close together as possible. The number of strands will depend on the weight of the wool. Wind it loosely so as not to spoil the "kink," for this is what makes the finished rug so effective.

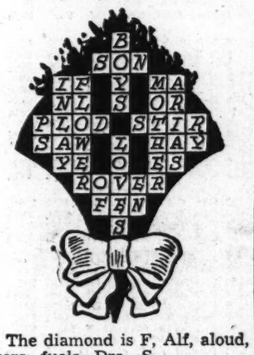

Now take a short piece of wool, slide it under the 18 strands, tie it tightly around them, and cut the loops. Slip it off the card and you'll have a kinky tuft of wool. Do this with all your wool, using as many colors as you can find.

Get a piece of burlap or canvas and cut it the size you want your rug to be. Turn about an inch under all around and sew it down flat. Use a heavy needle and soft string, and sew a row of tufts across the end of your material in any color arrangement you like. Alternating rows of dark and light are pretty, you can work out a design, or just put them on "hit and miss." Your arrangement will depend a good deal on the colors you have.

Keep the tufts close together so the material won't show through and continue until the whole surface is covered. The kinky tufts make it look so intricate and hard-to-make you'll be delighted with the finished rug.

Ants Are Among Shrewdest of All Living Creatures

A shrewder, busier, and altogether more enterprising lot than a community of ants would be hard to find, even among human beings.

Unless one knew better, one might say ants were kindly, generous and hospitable. But watching them closely, we are obliged to conclude that they are, after all, only efficient businessmen who arrange to be well paid for their services.

Take their attitude toward plant lice, or aphids, for instance.

They not only offer these little aphids their hospitality and wait upon them hand and foot; they actuallly carry them from one green pasture to another. And with infinite patience they stroke the little aphids gently with their antennae.

Kindness Has Motive.

Why so much generosity, one wonders, in a harsh world where each creature is fiercely bent on living at any price? The answer is simple. The friendship and service of the ants is pure self-interest. In return for it, the little aphids give the ants a honeyed milk called "honey dew" which they prize as the choicest of foods.

In their generosity toward the mites, also, the ants have the better of the bargain in the end. In payment for their "keep," the mites become the housecleaners of the ant colony. They are excellent scavengers and no refuse is too terrible to attract them. A very useful quality, from the clean little ants' point of view.

There is, however, a noticeable hostility between rival ant colonies, and wandering relatives who stray into a colony not their own, are not welcomed by the residents. They are looked at sharply as competitors, not visitors, and left in an unfriendly world, when they are not actually attacked.

Are Hardy Creatures.

Besides being rather civilized, ants are lucky enough to be among the hardiest of creatures. You can feed them deadly poison and they will survive it. You can hold them under water for 24 hours at a time and they recover when they are brought back into the air. You can chop off their heads and they go right on working for a month afterward.

All this has been proved by actual experiments. Ants can be frozen stiff or heated to 100 degrees Fahrenheit and they will survive. They can be starved for several months, and they can lose their bodies; and they live on to build their colonies all over the world, in any soil and in any climate.

THE ACCOMMODATION.

"I want to return to the city on a late train," said the stranger at a small town ticket office.

"Well," responded the agent, "I'd recommend No. 7. She's usually as late as any of 'em."

Lindy To Mark 10th Anniversary of Hop

Thursday will mark the tenth anniversary of Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh's famous non-stop flight across the Atlantic alone. The former air mail pilot is shown standing in front of his monoplane, "The Spirit of St. Louis," before the takeoff on May 20, 1927.

They Laughed When Lindy Said He'd Span the Atlantic Alone

But the Lone Eagle, Despite the Skepticism Which Greeted His Announcement, Succeeded and Was Acclaimed by Nations of the World.

Editor's Note: Some heretofore untold details connected with Colonel Lindbergh's historic flight from New York to Paris—the tenth anniversary of which will be observed May 20—are recounted here by a New York Times reporter who has been closely associated with the famous flyer. An authority on aviation, Mr. Lyman received the 1936 Pulitzer award for distinguished reporting for his exclusive story telling of the Lindbergh family's secret departure to self-imposed exile in England.

By LAUREN D. LYMAN.

(Copyright 1937, for The Constitution and the North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.)

WASHINGTON, May 15.—"So he's going to fly the ocean alone, is he?"

Veteran pilots and aviation men were saying that, sometimes with a laugh, frequently with an expression of unbelief, and always with the added word that it couldn't be done.

Early in the spring of 1927, stimulated by the offer of $25,000 for the first crew to fly non-stop between New York and Paris, by Raymond Orteig, genial Franco-American innkeeper, expeditions were prepared on both sides of the Atlantic. In France there were several, including the ill-fated Nungesser and Coli flight. In this country there were four, two of which were not entered for the prize.

One of the four had its origin in the mind of the mail flyer, Captain Charles A. Lindbergh Jr., as he flew his solitary course back and forth between St. Louis and Chicago with the night mail. Lindbergh it was who decided to fly solo.

Told Friends First.

He first broached the idea to a group of young aviation enthusiasts in St. Louis—his employer, William A. Robertson, of Robertson Air Lines; H. H. Knight, a young St. Louis businessman, and Harold M. Bixby, now an official of Pan-American Airways.

After listening to his arguments, they agreed to help. There was one plane which would do the trick, and Lindbergh came to New York to see if he could buy it. The owner was Charles A. Levine and the plane was one destined to fame, the Bellanca which Clarence Chamberlin, with Levine as passenger, was to fly across the Atlantic after Lindbergh's feat. Neither Levine nor G. M. Bellanca, designer and builder of the plane, believed that one man should make the flight, and they turned the mail pilot down.

Undiscouraged, this young flyer with the "fool" idea went out to San Diego to the Ryan Company, which was building a monoplane similar in many respects to the Bellanca. Lindbergh flew one of the Ryan stock models and then sat down with the designers and engineers to discuss plans. The conference started in the afternoon, and they were still at it when the sun rose the next morning. Before the day was over, the plane had been blocked out roughly on the drawing boards and one more obstacle had been removed.

Other Prerequisites.

There were others to come. A prerequisite to success was one of the new Wright Whirlwind 200-horsepower engines of the type which the Bellanca carried and by the aid of which the Bellanca had broken all records in its class at the national air races the year before.

The Wright company did not approve of the Lindbergh "stunt" and its officials said so.

However, the Ryan company was buying engines for other planes, and it was a simple matter for Ryan to slip in an order for a Whirlwind for Lindbergh.

Ship Finally Ready.

Out on the west coast, the Spirit of St. Louis was finished and Lindbergh carefully and methodically went about its testing. He flew nonstop from San Diego to St. Louis and set a record. The next day Lindbergh flew from St. Louis to Curtiss Field, L. I., in a little less than eight hours, establishing his second record within two days.

At once, opinions began to change. This solo expedition was something more than a Hollywood stunt. The wise ones still shook their heads. Yet, when the tall, bare-headed young man climbed out of his blind cockpit, quickly rejected the lightless hangar to which he was assigned and picked the best hangar on the field, and, after his plane was carefully backed in, turned to answer questions.

The plane, the pilot said, was, in his opinion, as good as could be built for the purpose, and that was that.

While waiting for weather, he tested another propeller and then returned to the metal blade with which he had started from California. At the end of one test flight, he broke a tail skid in avoiding people on the field.

"Going in the Morning."

At the end of seven days, with low clouds over Long Island and a rain-soaked runway, the word flashed through that "Lindbergh's going in the morning!"

There had been other reports before this night, May 19, and many were skeptical. A call to the weather bureau revealed that, while conditions on Long Island were not too good, the weather over the ocean was clearing, with favorable winds. A visit to the field disclosed that mechanics were gassing the silver plane and, as the night wore on, the conviction grew that Lindbergh was going. Finally, a few minutes after 2 a. m., he came down from his room in the hotel. It was still raining and he stood on the steps and looked at the sky.

A reporter asked him if he was really going.

"I don't know," he answered, and that was all. Then he went to the field. The drizzle continued and changed to a heavy mist soon after daylight. Lindbergh stayed in the hangar, watching closely the operation of straining his gasoline through chamois into the tanks.

Finally, the plane was moved out across the muddy field to the runway. There the last drops of gasoline were put in. Edward Mulligan, Wright Company motor expert, turned over the engine and listened to its even roar for a few minutes.

Lindbergh stood quietly by, saying little, smiling and confident.

After some minutes, he turned to Mulligan.

"How is it?" he asked.

"She sounds good to me," replied Mulligan.

"Might as Well Go."

"Well, I might as well go," the flier said, and climbed into the cockpit, closed and locked the door.

"So long," he called from the open window. He nodded to the mechanics to pull the chocks from in front of the wheels, opened his throttle, and the heavily loaded Spirit of St. Louis started sluggishly splashing through the mud. It was 7:52 a. m.

Thirty-three hours and 30 minutes later the silver-gray plane slipped down out of the night sky to touch its wheels on Le Bourget field, outside of Paris.

Before the flight, he outlined his plans briefly.

"I shall probably fly about 105 miles an hour at first and then cut the speed after the plane is lightened. Distance flying is a combination of speed and fuel economy," he said.

As a matter of fact, he covered the first 1,100 miles to St. Johns, Newfoundland, in 10 hours, 53 minutes. He picked up a tail-wind and made the ocean jump at a faster rate of speed, although his air speed was less than 100 miles an hour—just as he had planned. He averaged about 107 miles an hour for the whole trip—and had fuel enough left for another 500 miles.

And when it was all over and he had been feted by Kings and Princes and had returned to even wilder welcomes in the United States, he was asked what he was going to do now.

"Keep on in aviation—keep on flying," he answered.

THE ADVENTURES OF PETER PEN

By NICK NICHOLS

This is Windy, King Guffaw's flying ace. He is flying over the Bad Land, trying to spy on our enemies and see if there is not some way to prevent the marriage of Princess Lip to Prince Pickle. The time is short. The wedding takes place next week.

Princess Lip has resigned herself to the ordeal, as it means the saving of her father's life. Here she is having the seamstress fit her wedding dress. This could be such a joyful occasion if she were marrying the man of her choice, instead of that terrible Prince Pickle.

Prince Pickle suffers, too, but not from remorse. He is having ear trouble. For the first time in many moons, he is having a good cleaning. And Snarl's housekeeper seems to be putting a lot of vengeance into her work. Go to it, old lady!

Old King Snarl is in search of a minister, to perform the ceremony. It has been a long time since there has been a need for such a man. I think the last time was when they christened Prince Pickle. They should have used a milk bottle to christen him!

Deep down in a dungeon under the castle of King Snarl, we find our friend the Professor. He has been working night and day on something. Wonder what in the world he plans to do? In the excitement of the coming marriage, they have forgotten to watch him.

ANTI-JEWISH RIOTING CONTINUES IN WARSAW

WARSAW, May 15.—(AP)—The bombing of a Jewish building in Warsaw and rioting against Jews in Grabow, Lodz province, today marked the spread of anti-Semitic disorders in Poland in spite of nation-wide police precautions.

A bomb exploded at the entrance of the Jewish community building in the capital, damaging the building but causing no casualties.

A mob that collected in Grabow after a Jewish shopkeeper had knifed a Gentile competitor beat all Jews it could find and smashed 250 windows in Jewish homes.

LOCAL BUILDING REQUIREMENTS SET

Must Meet Minimum Standards for Eligibility.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 15. Minimum construction requirements set up locally by the Federal Housing Administration serve to eliminate or reduce unfair competition between operative builders by setting a minimum standard, according to Miles Colean, director of the technical division. Below this minimum, no project may obtain an insured mortgage.

"Since the Federal Housing Administration set up local minimum construction requirements," he said, "the operative builders now know definitely what is expected of them. Doubts and uncertainties which existed prior to the new system have been eliminated."

It was pointed out that, prior to the operation of the insured mortgage system, operative builders often indulged in "economical" practices to meet competition. For example, if one builder saved a part of construction cost by the elimination of certain construction features or the use of inferior materials, a competitor might frequently do likewise, with resultant inferior construction. Minimum construction standards, which all properties must meet before they may obtain mortgage insurance, act as a curb on such practices and tend to elevate construction standards in general.

FARM OF 715 ACRES BOUGHT FOR $30,000

Old Sandtown Place, With House Over 100 Years Old, Sold to H. A. Alexander.

Six sales, aggregating around $40,000, which included two farm tracts and a number of vacant lots, were reported Saturday by Henry Robinson, sales manager of Adams-Cates Company, realtors.

Henry A. Alexander bought from W. A. Campbell the Sandtown place, in old Campbell county, containing approximately 715 acres. This Sandtown place is now under lease to Fulton county as a farm. It is interesting to note that it was a settlement and had a postoffice and was stage coach headquarters before there was an Atlanta. The present house on the place is over a hundred years old, in which the late Mrs. J. M. High was born. The price paid was reported to be approaching $30,000 and the sale was handled by Rudolph Geissler and Josiah Sibley.

E. M. Price bought from Mrs. Corydan Kenan a lot on Peachtree road, 100x900 feet, for $4,500. Charles L. Green represented the purchaser and Harry Crider represented the seller. Mr. Price plans to build a home at once.

The Yale, Inc., bought a second lot on Brookridge drive from F. P. Phillips, of Lowndes county, Mississippi, for $1,000, and a house has already been started on this lot. N. J. Wooding Jr., was the salesman.

Mrs. Ada F. Noyes sold to W. T. Perkerson Jr., two houses at 664 and 666 Woodward avenue, S. E., for a cash consideration reported to be approaching $900. Howard Watkins was the salesman.

Mrs. Andrew J. Cooper bought a lot on Amsterdam avenue from F. P. Phillips through W. T. Perkerson Jr.

H. W. Dews sold to Ida Everett Henderson, a tract containing 100 acres, more or less, in DeKalb county, for a consideration reported to be around $2,500.

BRADLEY SPEAKER AT REALTY BANQUET

"Indications point to the greatest era of home building we have ever known, but we ought to be watchful to see that we are not overbuilding," said Vincent P. Bradley, well-known realtor, of Trenton, N. J., before a large gathering of real estate operators, businessmen, bankers and government officials, at a banquet given in his honor at the Athletic Club Friday night.

Mr. Bradley was the guest of the Atlanta Real Estate Board, and came here as a representative of the National Real Estate Association. He discussed the real estate situation, declaring it the "king of investments," appraisals, property management and other matters affecting the realty market. At the conclusion of his address, which was well received, an open forum was the order, and Mr. Bradley answered a number of questions asked by interested attendants.

With an Artificial Shiver Let's Consider Heating

Home Building

Heating.

By FRANCIS M. DAVES.

(Mr. Daves, a registered architect, every Sunday in The Constitution will contribute an article on home building in Atlanta and vicinity. He also will answer questions on problems of home building. Address Mr. Daves, care The Constitution, inclosing a stamped, addressed return envelope.)

It seems rather unseasonable to be writing about furnaces, stokers, thermostats and other such things that have to do with the heating system of a house. It is difficult to get warmed up to this subject now that summer is almost upon us. But, be that as it may, with an artificial shiver at an imaginary 10 degrees above zero, we will take up this very important phase of the house-building as though the winter winds were howling around the corners and threatening to chill us to the marrow.

Who among ye have not groaned terribly and cursed both inwardly and outwardly, on a cold winter's morning at the necessity of getting up at dawn and starting a fire among the cold, dead ashes of a furnace that had, with a seemingly malicious intent, gone out during the night? And have you not wished, many times over, for a furnace that almost takes care of itself—one that does not require constant watching and care to keep it well fed and contented? Such things as these, the automatic furnace, the automatic coal stoker, the humidifier, the thermostatic control, and many other labor-saving features which make your home a joy to live in have seemed very expensive to many of us.

Larger Expenditure Justified.

However, upon careful consideration of the many advantages which you get in comparison to the additional cost, and the consideration of unbiased opinions of others who already have these features in their homes, you will no doubt come to the conclusion that the larger initial expenditure is well justified. No matter whether you use oil, coal or gas as fuel you can get these automatic features for the added amounts of anywhere from about $150 to $500.

In this section of the country many of the houses are equipped with the warm-air type of heating system. There are, of course, the other types which necessitates the use of radiation, but for the present the discussion will be confined to the first mentioned system.

Most of us are familiar with the term "air-conditioning," but in order to help clear up some hazy ideas of what that implies in its usual sense a fuller explanation is perhaps needed. If your home is to be "air-conditioned" it will be equipped with an automatic system which does the following things: In winter the air is circulated throughout the house by means of a fan. It goes through a series of filters which remove the dust particles, and is then heated in the furnace and humidified, or mixed with water vapor, so that the heat delivered to the rooms will not be too dry. The fan forces this warm air up through the registers into the rooms, and as it cools the return registers take it back through the filters and to the furnace for its second trip around the system.

Cooling House in Summer.

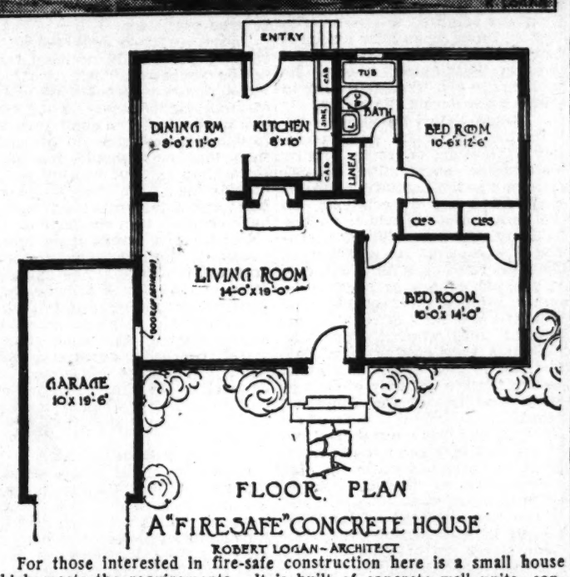

You may think that the recirculation of the same air in this manner would be unhealthy without adding fresh air to that in use. The fresh air is added—in fact it leaks into the house through every outside door and window in spite of weatherstripping. Also the furnace has a fresh air intake pipe, but the use of this is hardly necessary in the winter on account of this air leakage. The most important function of this fresh air inlet is to help cool the house in summer, especially at night, by bringing the colder outside air into the house and circulating it.

Real summer air-conditioning, involving the use of the compressors and cooling coils of a refrigerating unit has not yet reached the point of inexpensiveness where its use is the rule rather than the exception. However, the present air systems can be put in so as to take care of future additions of this sort.

The best thing to do is to have your architect or contractor explain fully to you any points about the system which you do not clearly understand. It may prove interesting as well as educational.

Let us suggest you visit the architectural clinic, open every Monday from 2 to 5 o'clock at the Carnegie library. Free advice is given to the public on architectural matters.

Next Sunday: To Come.

Protection of Home Neighborhood By Property Owners Latest Move

By HERBERT U. NELSON,
Secretary, National Association of Real Estate Boards.

Creation of neighborhood protective and improvement associations is authorized in house bill No. 431, just introduced in the Missouri legislature. The act incorporates a proposal which some of the best minds in the field of real estate and city planning have been developing for two years. It would open the way for a new kind of pioneering, the remaking of "blighted" areas of our cities and the throwing of proper protection around home neighborhoods that now do not have it.

The bill seeks to open an effective way through which property owners in a neighborhood may act, in line with the general city plan, to establish desirable conditions in their own home environs, and gradually eliminate undesirable conditions.

A city is a collection of neighborhoods. The important elements of family life and security of home ownership rest, in no small degree, upon the character of a neighborhood. Maintenance of neighborhood character in turn depends upon some control of land use. When stores, filling stations, billboards, and garages are permitted to come into a neighborhood of homes, unfavorable conditions arise which tend to discourage the home owner, and he leaves as soon as he can. The result is the blight which is the prevalent disease of our American cities today and which threatens billions of invested wealth.

Persons acquainted with the matter realize keenly that neighborhood factors are what build up real estate values. Favorable factors can be maintained only if property owners in a neighborhood have some vehicle through which they can act together protected by assurance that if they put in money and effort to set up more comfortable home conditions the value will not be swept away overnight by the coming in of some offensive or inharmonious use.

Our zoning ordinances were our first great attempt to set up protection for home areas. They do not cover the older regions. Meantime sound developers of "exclusive" residential sections went further. They have shown that good layout for a neighborhood can add much to its home quality. Also, because they were able to start with new land, they could and did impose, through private contracts, control of future use; that is, so home-buyers might be sure their neighborhood would keep its character. In these newer subdivisions, neighborhood improvement associations have been organized as a matter of course.

But older home neighborhoods have even greater need of such associations, since they are more subject to destructive force. The act now before the Missouri legislature proposes to give old neighborhoods powers similar to those which new subdivisions or small suburban village governments already have.

A neighborhood is an entity hard to define but easily understood. It is not too large to be beyond comprehension of the common man. Everyone is interested in his own neighborhood. The neighborhood is therefore the natural unit upon which to take action that will get the effective support of the average citizen.

We need to plan the broad framework of our cities, and the work of city plan commissions, very rightly, is stirring to new life. To this broad framework the neighborhood must be related.

Anything that will revive and strengthen neighbrohood pride and feeling should result, in the long run, in better city planning.

LIGHTNING FARMER'S ENEMY.

Despite modern preventive methods, lightning is still the farmer's greatest enemy. Other leading fire causes on farms, according to the National Fire Protection Association, are defective chimneys and heating apparatus, Matches and smoking, combustible roofs susceptible to sparks, spontaneous ignition and careless use of gasoline and kerosene. Increasing use of fire-retardant materials has increased the farmer's protection in recent years.

BRANCH BUILDING $15,000 RESIDENCE

Spacious Home Now Being Constructed in Woodward Estates.

A beautifully designed, spacious home, in which landscaping adds a most artistic touch to the surroundings, is now under construction for Harllee Branch Jr., in Woodward Estates, a pretty north-side subdivision, handled by Sharp-Boylston Company, realtors.

It is a large two-story home, as shown by the architect's drawing on this page, and will cost approximately $15,000. It is located on a knoll overlooking the heavy-wooded valley of Nancy's creek. The house consists of four bedrooms and two baths on the second floor, with a living room, hall, dining room, study, kitchen and lavatory on the first floor. A two-car garage, servants' quarters and laundry room in basement complete this handsomely designed country home.

The feature of the landscaping is a large formal garden in the rear of the house, the entrance to which is shown in the garden elevation. Both living room and dining room open on the rear of the house, lending an air of openness to the entire first floor.

The main body of the house is brick construction with wings of shingle and wide board. The house is located 300 feet back from Parkwood drive, with a winding approach.

This home is designed by Clement J. Ford, architect, and E. B. Chaplin, associate architect, and is being built by Ben Burgess.

WORK OF BUILDING IS 'ROUND CORNER

Residential Construction Industry on the Upgrade.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 15. Figures recently issued by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor indicate that the residential construction industry has "turned the corner" and is on the road to complete recovery, Federal Housing Administrator Stewart McDonald said today.

Residential construction, as shown by building permits issued, continues to increase rapidly, while home modernization and repair permits continue to maintain a good volume. Wholesale prices of building materials have also shown a steady tendency to increase, as the demand for materials of all kinds has grown.

"In view of the present healthy condition of the building industry, we feel that the expiration of the modernization credit plan of the Federal Housing Administration will not have any retarding effects, such as might have been felt even a year ago," Mr. McDonald said.

Small Demonstration Homes Will Be Built

The amazing speed of small home building interest in the United States this year is brought out in a survey recently made by the National Lumber Manufacturers' Association.

Local lumber dealers all over the country are taking part in the 1937 small homes demonstration campaign. In a number of cities as many as 20 homes will be built this spring—literally hundreds of them.

The houses will follow the plans of three small homes built originally at Bethesda, Md., a suburb of Washington, to show that artistic small homes are possible, including suitable lots, for $5,000 and under.

The subject of the small homes demonstration was the outstanding topic of discussion at the meeting in Washington April 19-20, at the Raleigh hotel, of the National Lumber Dealers' Association, which is extending nationally the demonstration launched in Washington by this association last fall.

Resettlement Administration Reveals More Than $22,000 Has Been Loaned.

The record of service by the resettlement administration to the farmers of Fulton county, in the two years since it was established was reviewed by A. P. Jones, local rehabilitation supervisor, on the occasion of the agency's second anniversary. The order setting up this agency was signed by the President April 30, 1935.

Since the commencement of this work in Fulton county more than 500 farm families have received some form of benefit from it, either in the form of a supervised loan, help in adjusting farm debts, or in some cases, outright grants.

Standard loans made to families without credit facilities for necessary feed, seed, livestock, farming equipment, and capital goods necessary to place their farms on a productive basis, are assisting these farm families in regaining economic security.

The 1937 program in Fulton county so far has loaned $22,357 to 115 families. "We had a fine record last year," said Mr. Jones, "and this year we expect to better this record. The present outlook for rehabilitation families is very bright and I am confident that when the harvest is made these families will have repaid their government loans and will have advanced a step or two up the rehabilitation ladder."

Supplementing the loan program the county supervisor's office cooperate in establishing community and co-operative services for low-income families and in farm debt adjustment work being carried on by the local county committees.

Rural rehabilitation has been made part of Secretary Wallace's farm program with official transfer of the resettlement administration to the United States Department of Agriculture, January 1, 1937.

SWOC AUTHORIZES BIG STEEL STRIKE TO GAIN DEMANDS

Walkout Would Affect 200,000 Workers in Five Large Plants.

By the Associated Press.

Union leaders gave the signal yesterday for a determined drive on five large independent steel producers for recognition of Committee for Industrial Organization units as sole collective bargaining agents.

Meeting in a strategy conference at Pittsburgh, the delegates voted authority to Philip Murray, chairman of the Steel Workers' Organizing Committee, to call strikes if necessary to gain their demands.

Murray, still jubilant over what he called "complete victory" in the 36-hour strike of 27,000 employes of the Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation, said some "very definite announcement" concerning each of the firms represented in the union parley could be expected within 10 days.

They were the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, Republican Steel Corporation, Youngstown Sheet & Tube Company, Inland Steel Company, and the Crucible Steel Company of America, whose employes total nearly 200,000.

After the Jones & Laughlin strike, in which agreement was reached on an election to decide the SWOC would represent all the corporation's employes, Murray announced the new goal in dealing with independents would be for sole collective bargaining rights.

The union already has contracts with United States Steel Corporation, giant of the industry, giving it the right to represent its membership.

Employes at eight St. Louis hotels struck in support of a demand for recognition of five unions and a closed shop agreement. Union leaders estimated 2,000 workers struck, and threatened to spread the walkout to 21 more hostelries this week if demands were ignored.

In Hollywood movie studio craftsmen and laborers "sat tight" awaiting a response from producers on new proposals to end their 15-day-old strike.

Each of 10 striking unions affiliated with the Federated Motion Picture Crafts presented individual demands to the producers Friday night. All of them reemphasized the FMPC demand for a union shop, but for the first time, definite wage and hour schedules which each union wants were included. These schedules were not made public.

Alfred E. Smith, In Brown Derby, Sails for Europe

NEW YORK, May 15.—(AP)—Clad completely in brown, topped by a brown derby, and chewing furiously on a cigar, Alfred E. Smith, veteran navigator of the political seas, sailed with his wife today on his first trip to Europe.

"This is just a regular pleasure trip. I've never been to the other side and I'm going now, and I want to have a good time," commented the former Governor, presidential candidate and phrase-coiner extraordinary, grinning automatically for the cameras on the deck of the liner Conte de Savoia.

"Ireland? Yes, I'm going to Ireland. A priest wrote me that he knew where my grandmother's house was in Westmeath, and I'm going there and look it over. I have no relatives there, but I want to look over Ireland."

The Smiths plan to see the pope in Rome, and then go to Naples, Paris, London and Dublin.

The well-wishers surrounding Smith included Senator Robert F. Wagner, John J. Raskob and the Smith children and grandchildren.

"Are you a good sailor, Mr. Smith?" somebody asked.

"I'll tell you when I get back," he said.

Lawrence Arraigns Members of Congress For Being Guided by Political Influence

"The Nine Old Men"

By DREW PEARSON AND ROBERT ALLEN.

CHAPTER XXII.

The Brooklyn Eagle, commenting upon this disclosure, observed:

"Mr. Mondell sets out therein that justices of the United States supreme court and the United States circuit court of appeals thus indulged in directing Republican politics in Wyoming."

It was a naive observation. For 30 years judicial robes have no more diminished the arch-Republicanism of Willis Van Devanter than the winds and the rains have fertilized the bleak mountains of Wyoming.

The Lame-Duck Senator.

Justice Sutherland and Justice Van Devanter have much in common. Both are extremely conservative, and both owe their conservatism to a western pioneer era which molded their youth. Both are ardent prohibitionists. Both are Old Guard Republicans. Both are courteous, likable gentlemen, and both, in contrast to some of their reactionary colleagues, get along perfectly with the liberal justices with whom they are in frequent legal disagreement.

But there is an outstanding difference between the two men: Van Devanter has brains. Sutherland has not.

According to Thomas Reed Powell, indiscreet Harvard law professor: "Justice Sutherland is a very able man. An old lady at the Chevy Chase Club told me so."

Attractive Personality.

Sutherland is rather an attractive and scholarly-looking person. Tall and slender, with a neatly trimmed gray beard covering a mild face, he is a sweet human character. Once during a summer recess—always very much occupied by the justices in reviewing hundreds of writs in preparation for the fall opening of the court—Sutherland was the only justice in the city, and the attorney for a youngster convicted in Chicago for violation of the Volstead act sought him out. The attorney wanted Sutherland to grant a petition for a writ of error which would serve as a period of delay. Sutherland took the petition and spent three minutes looking it over. Then he handed it back.

"I'm sorry I can't grant this," he said. "I only wish I could. It is the most courteous request ever made to a court. If lawyers only realized that we are busy and would write what they have to say in two pages instead of 10 . . . I really wish I could grant this. I should like to bring this petition to court to show the bar the real war to present a case. But you haven't a leg to stand on, and my opinion is fixed. I should be glad to have you see the other justices, however. They may view the case differently. You can reach Justice Brandeis, the nearest at Chatham, Mass., and Justice Holmes is near him in Beverly Farms. The others are much farther away."

He Does Not Sulk.

Sutherland maintains this agreeable manner through all court debates. He never gets irritated as does Butler. He never sulks as does McReynolds. He never tries to influence another justice. He retains his poise no matter what happens. But to change Sutherland's set tion, one might just as well talk conviction on any economic ques- to the moon.

This sweetness of disposition makes Sutherland all the more effective. The dynamite-laden reaction which falls from his mild, scholarly lips creates a more profound impression upon a gullible public than the hotheaded blasts of McReynolds or Butler. Sutherland can wrap the poison in a pill of sweet and sonorous pontification. "Peace is a sweet and holy thing," he informed the world in the Bland-MacIntosh citizenship case. "There are few finer or more exalted sentiments than that which finds expression in opposition to war." Following which benediction he proceeded to bring his legal meat ax down upon any citizen who would not bear arms in any war, aggressive or otherwise, into which any plundering politician blundered the country.

An Opinion Writer.

Partly because he has remained on good terms with the liberal wing of the court, partly because he takes great pride in his constitutional law, Sutherland long has been chief opinion writer for the conservative majority. Writing majority opinions requires a peculiar knack. The duller it is, the more it is wrapped up in ponderous legal platitudes, the more likely it is to reconcile the diverse views which usually exist even among the majority justices. If the opinion is too sharp on certain points, it will come back with question marks and objections noted on the margin. For every member of the court, especially those of the conservative wing, is wary about letting certain points of law be written into an opinion which may be cited as precedent against them in the future.

Mr. Sutherland is a past master at the trick of writing an unpopular opinion not well grounded on law; that is, saying nothing, but saying it in as many words as possible. Judge George C. Hutcheson describes this as "bewordling" an opinion. "For, while a judge may be," he says, "he cannot appear to be unreasonable. . . . Therefore by the practice of logamachy do I bewordle my opinion."

Voluminous Prolixity.

No other member of the court, with the possible exception, in recent months, of Justice Roberts, has such a gift for voluminous prolixity. So the subtle Mr. Hughes, too well aware of Sutherland's amiability, his faculty for compromise, his aptitude for righteous phraseology, his solemn, scholarly face and his inability to realize that he is being imposed upon, chooses him as the spearhead of the reactionary attack. Sutherland glories in his role. And without contributing a great deal to the actual formation of the majority's conclusion, he has established a record for writing the most unpopular opinions handed down by the court.

The justice is 74 years old now, and the younger, more energetic Roberts is beginning to pick up the lance of the reactionary majority. For George Sutherland is old even beyond his advanced years. He was old in everything save years even before he came to the supreme court. He has spent all his life in a past generation, an age that is no more—the frontier. He went west to practice the law of the west, the law which concerns itself with the land, with minerals, with grazing rights and which favored him who came first and took most.

Ancient Economic Theories.

And Sutherland—his manner of thinking, his law—dates back to those days that are dead and gone. His economic and social theories are as up to date as the moldy opera house, the gilded saloons, the crumbling shacks which once made up the thriving mining metropolis of Cripple Creek.

Born in Buckinghamshire, England, Sutherland's family brought him to Utah with Captain Horton Hought's wagon company of Mormon church colonists when he was only 15 months old. That was in 1863, and Utah was only a territory. From that point Utah and Sutherland grew up together. After going east for a law degree at the University of Michigan, Sutherland formed an alliance with the Mormon-Old Guard Republican machine which has been profitable to both ever since. A faithful, plodding party wheel horse, he was elected to the first senate after Utah was admitted to statehood in 1896 and four years later was promoted to the house of representatives in Washington, where he served only one term, returning in 1905 for two terms as senator.

Good-Natured Senator.

In the senate, he was known for his inoffensive good nature, his extreme conservatism, his unswerving party regularity and his long and dreary dissertations on the constitution to which no one paid any attention, with the exception of one man. He was Warren Gamaliel Harding, a senatorial colleague, who, perhaps because he rarely listened and because he himself knew little of such things, thought the scholarly-appearing Utahan a very erudite man. This fact was to play a very important part in the life not only of George Sutherland but of the American people.

Sutherland was a member of the senate judiciary committee when Louis D. Brandeis came up for confirmation as associate justice. He had heard that Brandeis was at one time retained by Louis K. Liggett in a case contending that chain stores did not violate the Sherman anti-trust act. This, Sutherland considered inconsistent with Brandeis' anti-trust views, and although the committee already had finished extended hearings on Brandeis, Sutherland asked that the matter be reopened. This was done, but after hearing one witness the committee sent the appointment back with a renewed recommendation that it be confirmed.

Twelve Years in Senate.

During his 12 years in the senate there was nothing which came up involving Reed Smoot, prohibition, and beet sugar which Sutherland did not favor, and nothing involving La Follette and the Progressives which he did not oppose.

"Within the last few years the United States of America has become the field of operation for an amiable band of insurgent soothsayers," was the way he described the Progressives to the senate galleries, "who have been going up and down the land indulging in cabalistic utterances respecting the initiative, referendum and recall and divers and sundry other ingenious devices for realizing the millennium by the ready and simple method of voting it out of its present state of incubation. They direct our attention to the clouds flying above the far western horizon, upon which the flaming finger of the Oregon sun has traced in radiant and opalescent tints glowing pathways, shining minarets, stately temples and castle and palaces, pinnacles of gold, caves of purple. . . ."

Utahans Favored.

Meanwhile Sutherland saw to it that the citizens of Utah were given more than their quota of lush jobs in Washington, kept such a tight rein on the Mormon-Republican machine that Utah was one of the two states to go for Taft in 1912, attended every Republican national convention from 1900, and in every conceivable respect was a good party man. Party regularity, however, was not enough. Utah is a long way from Washington, but eventually the folks at home got wise to their colorless representative in the senate, and in 1916 Sutherland lost out to that unintellectual Democrat, William H. King, who had been his classmate at Brigham Young University and the Michigan Law school, and later became his law partner at Provo.

"Nine Honest Men"

By DAVID LAWRENCE.

CHAPTER XVII.

Statesmen or Politicians?

This is a grave moment in which the humblest citizen feels the obligation to petition respectfully members of the congress to restore constitutional government in America.

The supreme court of the United States has rejected by unanimous opinion the assumption that under our written constitution the legislative and executive functions of government could be combined, that congressional power could be delegated for purposes however beneficent or that any power could be invoked which the people have specifically reserved to themselves.

The newspaper headlines tell us of unprecedented attention being focused on the chief executive from time to time to determine the course of national policy.

The inescapable truth, however, is that the American people are looking directly to the congress where the responsibility is fixed by the people under our representative system of government.

Time to Decide.

The hour of decision has arrived. The question is whether the members of the congress will respond to the call for statesmanship or be guided by the demoralizing influences of party politics and personal ambition.

This is no occasion for partisan pique. The governing motive must be true patriotism.

These are abnormal times in which personal advancement cannot be considered. The national interest demands breadth of vision and not the pettiness of the ego. Far better that men shall go down to defeat in devotion to principle than that they should humiliate themselves and our institutions by considering first and foremost what effect their next action will have on their own re-election.

For America stands at the crossroads. He is a blind legislator who does not realize that the supreme court in 1935 issued a momentous warning, yet merely restated what had been said many times before in decisions of the same court, merely confirmed again and again what it pointedly proclaimed on January 8, 1934, in the Minnesota moratorium case when it declared that "emergency does not create power."

"Flimsy Basis" of NRA.

Look back at the "Congressional Record" of 1933 and read again the debate covering the flimsy basis on which so much of the New Deal legislation and particularly the NRA was founded. Witness also the warnings of the lower courts and finally the opinion by the supreme court of the United States in the "hot oil" cases, a decision of 8 to 1—almost unanimous—that congress had improperly and unconstitutionally delegated its powers to the executive under the NRA.

Five months elapsed after that decision before the Schechter case was decided. What was congress doing in those five months in which it was in continuous session? Was it preparing for any eventuality? What is the meaning of the oath of office which every senator and every representative takes when he is elected?

Does the oath read, "I will faithfully support and defend the constitution of the United States only if it comports with the wish of my political party and the head of my political party, right or wrong."

What Does Oath of Office Mean?

Or does the oath mean what it says, that a man or woman elected by the people swears to uphold and support the constitution to the best of his or her ability and in accordance with the precepts of constitutional law well established by precedents and decisions of the supreme court of the United States?

The issue is basically one of intellectual honesty and fidelity to the public interest.

For it is proper to violate the constitution by passing laws so plainly invalid that a unanimous court, comprised of liberals and conservatives, nullifies them in one fell swoop, does it not logically follow that a rubber-stamp congress may in the not far distant future be actually picked by the executive after the fashion of European dictators?

Arbitrary Action Called Disgrace.

The NRA was conceived in the blindness of prejudice and in a panic of bewilderment after the bank holiday. It was a measure aimed at control of industry and business by the central government in defiance of every American concept from the beginning of the republic.

The record of arbitrary action under certain NRA regulations and boycotts was a disgrace to democratic government and our free institutions.

The abuses of power which sprang up under the NRA, the plain attempt to set up a system of cartels and monopolies that would subsidize big business and protect the inefficient against the competition of the efficient, must not, of course, obscure the fact that through the NRA experience the social impulse to higher objectives in our economic system was given a certain commendable encouragement.

Those social gains can and must be retained. But they will be preserved and increased in their scope of usefulness only if we recognize the fundamental principle so clearly brought home to us in 10 years of the Volstead act, namely that law and custom proceed only from a development of public sentiment in our communities—in local units. This is the very essence of state sovereignty.

BOOKS AND THEIR AUTHORS

Cradle of the Navy

'ANNAPOLIS, ANNE ARUNDEL'S TOWN, Dodd, Mead & Co., New York. 337 pp. $3. By William O. Stevens.

"Annapolis, Anne Arundel's Town," familiarly referred to as the "cradle of the navy," is a book in which is recorded the history and legends of the picturesque town from the time when it was the colonial capital of Maryland. The important part the town has played in the nation's growth from its birth, and its past full of historic richness, is delightfully traced by the author in an interesting and delightful manner which holds the reader's interest from cover to cover.

Mr. Stevens writes from a standpoint of intimate knowledge as well as from the possession of historic references of the town, giving touches of human interest connected with the academy and presenting colorful and vivid outlines and descriptions of the lore and traditions of the great service school.

One part which the writer found of unusual interest was the birth in 1906 of that now famous national air, "Anchors Aweigh." The title and words were written by Commander Alfred H. Miles, when as a midshipman, he was choir leader at the academy. He is a brother of Mrs. Stevens, wife of the author. The institution had existed 60 years or so without any peculiarly navy song to sing at football games and class reunions, or any occasion of the sort. The bandmaster Lieutenant Charles A. Zimmerman, wrote a march each year which he dedicated to the graduating class and played during June week, but were not often heard outside Annapolis and seldom played after the June week festivities. The then Midshipman Miles told him his classmates were eager for a song with an inspiring swing which could be played at football games and as a marching song—one that would live. He offered to collaborate with Zimmerman and between the two, sitting at the chapel organ, the famous air, which has become a classic, was composed.

Emphasizing his talent as a narrator, Mr. Stevens has included in his book some 60 illustrations of historic homes and landmarks in and around the town situated on the Severn, near where the river flows into the Chesapeake bay. Romances of the inhabitants give the book a novel angle, while background and careers of colonial governors, Revolutionary generals, signers of the declaration of independence, craftsmen, portrait painters, commodores of the old navy, Spanish prisoners, poverty-stricken aristocrats mark the book as one of historical value and importance as well.

The author was professor of English and history at the naval academy for 21 years and this fact bears an interesting angle to readers of the book, which is easy reading and, safe to say, is destined to reach the heights of popularity as did his "Nantucket," which was written with the same light touch but with the same authoritative references to important historical data.

YOLANDE GWIN.

Dr. Stevens will be at Davison's Monday to autograph copies of his book.

Western Robin Hood.

MAD-GUN MESA, by Francis W. Hilton, H. C. Kinsey & Co., New York. 277 pp. $2.

The author portrays a modern Robin Hood in his latest tale of action on the western plains in the person of Butch Creigh. The story is laid in a small, lawless town in Colorado and Butch, you are led to believe, is the leader of a band of outlaws, a cool, devil-may-care desperado.

His escapades and adventures are thrilling and the author has built an exciting plot into which he has tossed his main character. Butch always is ready to settle all the disputes in the territory with his gun; and he is a dead shot with that gun. He rescues Dolores, a girl who has been forced by circumstances to work in a dance hall, from Ace Martin, a bandit and a killer. She supplies the love interest and, knowing much of Butch's good deeds, cannot believe him the notorious outlaw he appears to be.

However, the author skillfully convinces Dolores and the reader that Butch really is a tough hombre and a bad guy, then supplies a surprising climax with a real punch. This is a good western story with lots of action and is exciting and entertaining from start to finish. DAN BROWN.

'Annapolis, Anne Arundel's Town' Pictures

The first summer cruise of the naval students is a great experience, according to Mr. Stevens, who gives detailed descriptions of life at the academy. It means life on the battleship for the first time and the midshipmen learn to do all the jobs of the enlisted men and the day's routine is full and yet enjoyable. Shore leave on the cruise means visits, perhaps to London, Berlin or Paris, as well as to seaport towns—a thrilling experience for many a boy who has never traveled far from home.

A sketch from the photograph of old "Damn the Torpedoes" Hartford forms an interesting part of the reading matter in the chapter "Early Nineteen Hundreds at the Academy." The ship is connected with an old custom at the academy when, during "plebe summer," it was considered the proper thing for every plebe to "spike his hat," which involved climbing the shrouds of the Hartford's mainmast.

Practical Aid.

MAKING A GO OF MARRIAGE, by Elmer E. Ferris. John C. Winston Co., Philadelphia. 252 pp. $1.50.

It would seem that few things are more urgently needed by a large portion of our population than a clear conception of the essential elements of a successful married life. Unfortunately, however, worth-while assistance in the ordering of personal conduct is rarely gained through the reading of a book. Nevertheless, occasionally some fundamental idea, already half-gleaned from personal experience, is made more salient as a result of reading it in a book, thereby influencing behavior. For this reason, books like Elmer E. Ferris' "Making a Go of Marriage" are probably helpful to many of those who find their marriages disappointing.

Mr. Ferris asserts that his book is based on "common sense," and, as a matter of fact, very few ideas are expressed in it which have not already been written into platitudes. Nevertheless, Mr. Ferris' ideas are sound, and they are the ones which are the most universally overlooked by the unhappily married. It would seem, therefore, that "Making a Go of Marriage" would fulfill its purpose—that of a practical aid toward making a success of marriage—very well.

Fantastic Future.

THE CHOSEN RACE, by Edgar Albion Lyons. Cavalier Publishing Company. St. Petersburg, 442 pp. $2.65.

"A novel based on the depression and the machine age," is the ably written volume strongly reminiscent of H. G. Wells' "The Shape of Things to Come," being cast in the years circa 2000 A. D. It differs considerably, however, in basic approach, and to those who like fantasy of this type it will prove interesting.

A highly-developed civilization has evolved in the author's vision, in which cities are the only form of communal life. Those whom the cities have not been able to absorb remain outcasts, roaming the world as in prehistoric times. One industrialist, Endicott, believes that the civilization of the time will collapse of its own weight, and so establishes a training station for a civilization depending more on the handicraft arts of today. He organizes his little kingdom in a section, now Vermont, and his theories are vindicated in the collapse of machine in the big cities.

The novel is extremely well writen, the material ably handled and interestingly presented.

Delightful Reading.

"THE FOUR MARYS," by Fanny Heaslip Lea. Dodd, Mead & Co. New York. 304 pp. $2.

The low rambling white house situated among the green Connecticut hills had for many years been the home of the four Marys. Enshrined in this historical old mansion were all the hopes and ideals of the first Mary, now long since gone to her reward, and yet who seemed always to be in their midst because of the old family traditions she had left for them to dutifully carry on.

Molly, Meg and Mimi—a family of American women, were managing to live without a man in the house. Molly, now in the twilight of life, is very quiet and serene as she sits knitting by the fireside, thinking of the past. Meg, a very attractive woman at 40, considers herself young enough to risk a second marriage. Under this matriarchy, Mimi comes of age. She, being a carefree and fun-loving girl, is impatient of the mistakes of her elders, and with three women of the same family under one roof, it is no wonder that she beats her wings against the walls to escape.

There are three sources of exciting romance in this book, "The Four Marys," which is just the thing for an evening of delightful reading. —SARA TRAYLOR.

A Girl's Awakening.

ONLY LOVE LASTS—by Rosamond Du-Jardin, J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia, 312 pp. $2.00.

Through this story of a gallant struggle against odds emerges the vivid romance of a girl's awakening. Lovely Toby Chandler, living in a small town finds life unbearable in the home of her stepfather, so Toby goes to Chicago to work. In Chicago she finds friends and romance, and slowly works out the pattern of her life. Fighting against odds that nearly engulf her at times, Toby wins for herself real happiness.

Red Collins, her boy friend from the home town, follows her to Chicago, which starts the tongues of the little town to wagging, and gossip goes the rounds, playing its part in the shaping of the life of this young girl and her red-headed boy friend.

Rosamond DuJardin, the author of "Only Love Lasts," has lived the most of her life in Chicago, so she writes of the life in this city from first hand information. She has woven into this story a deep understanding of young love and the difficulties that face a beautiful girl and a boy from a small town. This is the second of her novels, the first being "All Is Not Gold." JESSE R. PETTY.

Story of Richmond.

BUGLES BLOW NO MORE, by Clifford Dowdey. Little, Brown and Company, Boston. 493 Pps. $2.50.

This Atlantic Monthly Press book is the story of Richmond and its people in the days of the War Between the States. It is somewhat parallel to "Gone With the Wind," and will be found to be equally delightful reading. It is not as long as Margaret Mitchell's great book, and lacks somewhat the vividness of character that made her novel an all-time best seller, but it is, nevertheless, a vital addition to the literature of the south and of the war period.

Dowdey's contribution might well be termed a "male" novel in contradistinction to the Atlantan's "female" book. The emphasis in characterization is on the men with whom the book deals, rather than on the women as in the Mitchell story.

The author has also concentrated less on individuals in his novel, although the characterization of several is outstanding.

He has restricted his story to Richmond and the surrounding country during the war years, when the waves of battle looped the doorstep of the capital of the Confederacy. The emphasis is on the war, the fighting and the waiting of a people whose relatives were fighting, some of the time, within earshot.

The main characters are two who in normal times would never have extended a relationship beyond set limits. The stress of the times, however, throw Mildred Wade, daughter of an aristocratic Richmond family, and her father's clerk, Brose Kirby, into a companionship culminating in marriage. Past them, around them, sweeping them along in its flow, pours the actualities of war, of near-starvation, of tragedy and of the spirit that inspired the men and women of the Confederacy.

Dowdey, a realist, has not dealt gently with the Confederate administration, choosing to discard fable for fact in his portrayal of those charged with the handling of affairs. W. G. K.

Reference Work.

WASHINGTON, CITY AND CAPITAL. United States Government Printing Office, Washington. 1,140 pp. $3.

This huge volume is the second of the federal writers' project series, produced as a relief measure by the Works Progress Administration. The first dealt with Idaho.

It is beautifully and effectively illustrated. It is a monumental work, including within its covers a record of its dramatic history and human associations; an account of its varied cultural background and activities, a description of the vast machinery of national government, and a guide to its architecture, monuments, museums, galleries, historic houses, parks and numerous other points of interest. Some idea of its size can be obtained from its weight, five pounds, nine ounces.

It differs from the traditional concept of a guide in that it develops other phases not customarily dealt with, including an outline of the functions of various government departments. It is regrettable that the section on the supreme court permits a smack of political bias to creep in.

Otherwise the volume is an excellent commentary on at least one phase of the Works Progress Administration and is a credit to the writers' project. It is not a book for casual reading, but as a reference work is a much-needed contribution to American literature. W. G. K.

Another Western.

BEYOND THE BADLANDS, by Stephen Payne. John H. Hopkins & Co., New York. 254 pp. $2.00.

The story centers around the efforts of Flame Carraway, alias Sorrenson, a reformed outlaw, to make restitution for all the wrongs committed during his notorious career of robbery and pillage. He enlists the aid of Bob Thorpe, a gallant and true-hearted cowboy, for this perilous undertaking.

But the hand of death stills the fighting heart of Flame Carraway, and glamorous, red-haired Willa Hawley, his step-daughter, is given the task of carrying out his plans. With the aid of Thorpe, she defeats the murderous plans of the thieving, hard-bitten nephews of Carraway, finding at last her greatest happiness.

Stephen Payne in this story of life in a wild, unbroken country, strikes a stirring note with his fast-moving drama of stark reality, courageous heroism and hair-raising thrills.

PLEASANT HOMES

By ELIZABETH MacCRAE BOYKIN.

WHEN THE BRIDE BUDGETS HER LIVING ROOM AND DINING ROOM.

This classic dining room uses a bay window as a conservatory for flowers. Note the way it is framed by striped green and oyster white draperies, a mirrored cornice and oyster white walls. The floors are inlaid in white and green rubber flooring, and the chairs are covered in green.

It's all very romantic to think of a bride's house in terms of satin upholstery and off-white broadloom. But the catch is that most brides are up against the realities of budgets, upkeep and durability, and neither satin upholstery nor pale broadloom fit that picture.

Besides, part of the fun of getting married is the adventure of making a home out of next to nothing. Starting on a shoe string and working up to pomp and elegance along about 50 is the way it ought to be done . . . where would we go from here if we started out rich and fat!

HAVING A VERY GRAND TIME.

Be that as it may, most brides we know are going around with pencils over their ears, trying to make wedding presents and family contributions of old furniture jibe with what a very young budget can afford. And having a very grand time about it too. We'd guess they're having a better time than the brides who can shower checks hither and yon for everything to match and very expensive.

Last week we discussed the budgeting of a bedroom. Today we will go into the subject of budgeting living room and dining room. We're considering them together because so many young couples combine the two in one room. And those who do have a separate dining room generally plan it in co-ordination with the living room, since small house plans so often lay out the two rooms so that they adjoin through wide openings which make them seem like one room from a decorative point of view. Anyway, in either event, it's simpler in planning the design of these two rooms to consider them together.

SERVE AS GUIDES.

As we've said before, rules for budgets are made to be broken, for you'll have to adjust them to your particular needs and limitations. But they serve as guides and keep one from getting unexpectedly out of depth.

Last week we suggested that the living room might safely get 27 per cent of the complete home furnishing budget, the dining room 38 per cent, the bedroom 20 per cent, the kitchen 8 per cent, the bathroom 2 per cent, the hall 5 per cent.

Of the amount alowed for the living room, here is a dependable way to apportion it:

Floor covering	20%
Curtains	7%
Furniture	69%
Lamps	4%

And for the dining room, these are the divisions:

Floor covering	12%
Curtains	4%
Furniture	46%
Silver	14%
China and glass	8%
Linen	12%
Mirror	4%

The young couple starting housekeeping on a very small budget will usually do better for themselves by combining living room and dining room for the present, taking care, however, to buy pieces that will do later in the separate dining room they expect to have. For a combination living-dining room, here is a budget that will serve as a starting point:

Floor covering	20%
Curtains and draperies	4%
Furniture	50%
Silver	10%
China and glass	4%
Linen	4%
Wall hangings	4%
Lamps	4%

Which, applied to the expenditure of the young couple with $500 to furnish their new home complete meant $135 for the living room and $190 for the dining room, or a total of $325 for the two rooms. By considering the two rooms as one, they were able to get much more enduring qualities in rug accessories. This is the way they spent their $325 on their combination living-dining room:

Floor covering	$ 65
Curtains and draperies	11
Furniture (including a secretary that could be used for linen, silver and china as well as for a desk, a drop-leaf table and chairs that were suitable for side chairs between meals, or a trestle table and benches might also fit here. Besides these pieces, they bought a sofa, two easy chairs and some small end tables.)	167
Silver	30
China and glass	12
Linen	12
Mirror	12
Lamps	12
	$321

Naturally the bride who has more or less to spend will adjust the percentages to suit her own particular needs Presents may make a big difference too, as well as a girl's own skill in fixing things up.

PRETTY PRACTICAL.

As we said in the beginning of this article, it's alluring to think about the frothy decorations, but today's bride has to be pretty practical. That's why it's a good idea to weigh the wear she can expect to get from the fabrics she's interested in and try to be sure she's getting things that can stand being lived with.

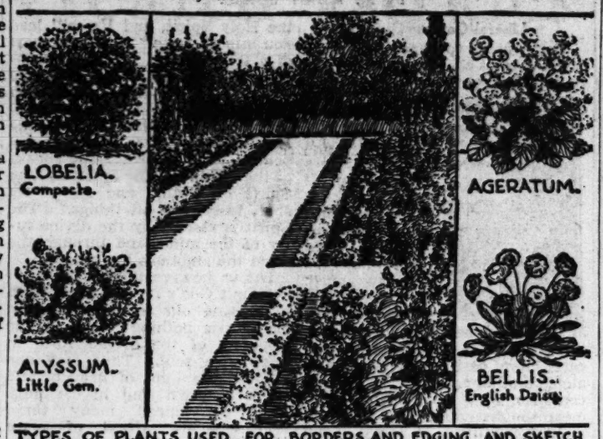

Almost as important as the budget is the design for the room—both now and later. Thus as she buys for today, the wise bride will also keep in mind the role that that particular piece of furniture will play in the room as her means enable her to develop the room from its gay bare beginnings to an interior that is handsome indeed.

Incidentally, the bride on a budget may be interested in our new bulletin, "Making Your Own Lamp Shades." This includes directions with diagrams for making various types of lamp shades from simple paper ones to beautifully tailored silk shades. This bulletin will be sent on receipt of a stamped, self-addressed envelope, addressed to Miss Boykin, in care of The Atlanta Constitution.

Dwarf Flowers Fill Many Needs

By W. ELBRIDGE FREEBORN.

TYPES OF PLANTS USED FOR BORDERS AND EDGING AND SKETCH SHOWING EXAMPLE OF THEIR USE.

Free use of the small-flowered, dwarf-growing, free-blooming annuals as edgings adds much to the attractiveness of the flower garden or border, and of these plants the sweet alyssum is deservedly the most popular grown, for its snowy sheets or sweet-scented flowers are a constant delight until hard freezing. Of the alyssum, the variety little gem make solid compact mats of bloom which are better adapted for neat edging than some of the types of more straggling growth.

Alyssum combined with dwarf ageratum makes a beautiful border. The dainty blue, rose and white daisies of the Swan River daisy are material for a beautiful airy border for more robust plants, and this little annual is deserving of wider use. The dwarf candytufts are rivals of the alyssum for snowy whiteness, as well as giving beautiful shades of lilac and carmine. They are invaluable in the flower garden.

The anagallis or pimpernell is a spreading plant which bears star-shaped blue and scarlet flowers. It likes a sunny place and blooms freely, making a delightful edging plant.

Virginia stock, a dainty little plant in pink and rose shades, makes a great sheet of bloom, but its chief weakness is that its season of bloom is rather short. Gilia tricolor is another rare and handsome little edging plant. Its tiny cups produced in great confusion are pale lilac, shading to yellow in the center with five purple spots. It grows only seven inches tall.

A tiny marigold, tagetes signata pumila, bearing myriads of brilliant orange flowers above fern-like sweet-scented foliage, is a handsome border plant making a solid miniature flowering hedge. It is a fine plant for bordering the most robust French and American marigolds.

For colored foliage, the golden ball feverfew gives brilliant effect with the dusty millers or cineraria and centurea for gray contrasts. The tufted pansies or bedding violas are used lavishly in English gardens as edging or carpeting plants, and are coming into great popularity here. They are more compact in growth than pansies with longer stems and more flowers to a plant, while the range of colors is more the same. The self-colors give the finest effect.

Everyone Can Have a Window Box Garden.

Porch and window boxes sometimes afford the only opportunity the apartment dweller has to grow flowers. On the other hand, they are extensively used in suburbs for the decoration of houses. In either case, satisfaction will be increased if, in planning them, it is remembered that in effect they are architectural ornaments, and should harmonize in size, shape and color with the house.

A window box should be at least 10 inches wide and eight inches high, and not much more than 3 feet in length. Where wide windows are to be fitted, it is better to have the box built in sections. The box should have some way for draining away excess water, unless it is equipped with a self-watering device. A wood which resists moisture is necessary if the box is to last. Cypress or white pine are good.

Soil in the box should be rich, because there is little of it and the plants will need lots of food for proper growth. Well enriched potting soil from a florist is best. Watering is vital because a window box dries out quickly. Daily inspection should be made, and a thorough soaking given as often as the soil becomes dry. But whenever a tendency is observed for the soil to remain continuously wet, or there is reason to believe that excess water is accumulating in the box and not draining off, that condition must be corrected at once. The soil ought to be like a sponge which has been soaked with water and squeezed out; moist but not waterlogged.

Sunshine is necessary for most flowers, and allocation where the sun shines at least five hours a day should be chosen if possible. An east or west window, if unshaded by neighbor buildings will do; a south window is best. A north window is always doubtful, and will usually require the selection of special material, chosen to endure shade.

The best flowers for window boxes are those which will blossom continuously and freely, and in this respect the petunias have few equals. All types are good bloomers, but the small flowered singles give the best color effects. The balcony petunias bearing single flowers of medium size, in strong colors, drape in festoons from the box, and are liked by many.

The new fragrant double nasturtiums are good for window boxes, especially Golden Gleam, which makes fairly long vines, and its bush-type offspring, Golden Globe. Other flowers suitable for boxes in a sunny location are geratum, begonia, semperflorens, geraniums, heliotrope, lobelia, mignonette petunias, achyranthus, acalypha, dracaena indivisa, crotons and sweet alyssum.

Trailing plants which do well in sunny exposures include English ivy, ivy geranium, Kenilworth ivy, ground ivy, ice plant, thunbergia, trailing fuchsia, trailing lantana, trailing lobelia, vinca major, wandering Jew and the very best of all trailing plants for window boxes, the balcony type of petunia.

For shady locations these are recommended: aspidistra, Boston ferns, fancy leaved caladiums, asparagus sprengeri, ferns, Rex begonia small palms and tuberous-rooted begonias.

Flowers for the window or porch box should be chosen with the color of the house in mind. Best effects are obtained when the flowers provide a contrasting but harmonious color to that of the house. Instead of red flowers on a red brick house, white would be more pleasing. Red flowers would look well with a gray house, and on a cream or yellow house, blue flowers would be attractive. The box itself may be of the same color as the house, or as the house trim, but should not be conspicuous in either color or design, as this would detract from the beauty of the flowers.

Mrs. Rice Presides At Garden Club Meet

The Neighborhood Garden Club presenting new officers for the year, met Friday with Mrs. George M. Brown on Muscogee avenue, with Mrs. Charles F. Rice, president, presiding.

Mrs. Rice brought an inspirational message, inspiring them for more active service for the coming year, and said that co-operation is the spirit of the present and this is a year of great opportunity, if the membership will put enough energy behind their desires, to make their dreams an accomplished fact. She urged each to study the problems of gardening, and broaden their vision, so that the work will be permanent and of lasting beauty for the Neighborhood Garden Club.

Mrs. William E. Matthews' resignation as treasurer was accepted and Mrs. Edward N. O'Beirne was unanimously elected to fill the office. The resignations of Mrs. S. F. Boykin and Mrs. Foster Hume Sr. are a loss to the club. Mrs. A. D. Adair and Mrs. James N. Brawner gave the highlights of the recent state convention at Rome of the Garden Club of Georgia. The club was awarded third prize for the best display of yearbooks.

The Mary V. Connally conservation prize of $10 given annually by Mrs. John Spalding for the best club work during the year in planting native plants and shrubs in country church yards and cemeteries, was won by the Vienna club with a marvelous report.

Mrs. Arthur Tufts, guest speaker and one of Atlanta's well known flower lovers, spoke on "Flower Arrangement." An attractive feature of the meeting was the flower show, entries being made by the members, and beautifully displayed. Mesdames Anita Armstrong and Charles Winship were the judges. The flowers were arranged in two classes, large and small. Ribbon awards were made in the miniature class to Mrs. George Brown, first place; in the large arrangement, to Mrs. Hal Hentz, first place, and to Mrs. John Spalding, second place.

Tea was served by the hostess at a table beautifully decorated with spring flowers. New officers of the club are Mesdames Charles F. Rice, president; James N. Brawner, vice president; William E. Beresford, recording secretary; T. J. Hightower, corresponding secretary, and Edward N. O'Beirne, treasurer.

Mrs. Crown Speaks At Church May 19

"Correct Table Settings" is the subject of a lecture by Mrs. Fletcher Pearson Crown at the Holy Trinity church parish house on Wednesday at 3 o'clock. The stereopticon slides to be used in illustrating this lecture have been arranged by a silver company with the home editor of Better Homes and Gardens magazine.

Table settings, including flower arrangements for every type of entertaining will be featured. As this is the first time this has been given in Atlanta, interest is being shown in the subject, especially since the styles in table setting have been changed so much in recent years.

Cheshire Bridge Garden Club Meets.

The Cheshire Bridge Garden Club met recently with the vice president, Mrs. Zode Smith presiding. Reports were made by the chairmen. Mrs. C. J. Matson won blue ribbon for best flower arrangement; Mrs. J. C. Turner, the red ribbon. The flower show chairman reported four blue ribbons won in flower show. The trip to Mrs. Robert Campbell's garden at Cedartown, was so enjoyed that other trips are being planned.

The program chairman, Mrs. E. P. Crenkshaw, presented Rev. Fred L. Glisson, superintendent of Methodist Children's home, who talked on "Gardens of the Bible."

Luncheon was served and the June meeting will be held at home of Mrs. L. C. Morris on Edison avenue.

Atkins Park Garden Club Meets On Friday.

Atkins Park Garden Club meets Friday at 2:30 o'clock at the home of Mrs. J. L. Pasley, 1106 St. Charles place. Mrs. W. S. Duncan, Mrs. Enos S. Hartman and Miss Erin Hayes will be co-hostesses. Mrs. Logan Thompson will be the guest speaker, garden and flower arrangements illustrated.

The annual flower show will be held at this time with Mesdames Arthur Tufts, A. E. McCann and W. N. Pendleton as judges. Mrs. George E. McWhite won first prize at the mammoth flower show, Piedmont Club, for an arrangement in a Victorian container.

Questions, Answers On Garden Subjects

By MRS. FLETCHER PEARSON CROWN

I can't say why, but this morning I feel such a strong urge to pass on to you something that I learned while in Chapel Hill during the Gardener's extension course. It may be the perfume from the honeysuckles, or that even stronger fragrance from the Philadelphus, for it is about fragrance that I wish to write. Mrs. R. L. McMillan, from Raleigh, had the most wonderful display of fragrance jars, lemon verbena sachet, pomander, and a sachet made from herbs.

The pomander is such an easy thing to make, and would be one of the most novel and welcome gifts to make for a sick friend. Stick an orange full of cloves (whole), using as many cloves as the orange will hold. Roll in powdered orris root. Wrap gently in waxed paper and let stand a day or two. Then allow to dry thoroughly. It is then used for a pleasant fragrance, which is brought out by the warmth of the hand. The sick friend holds it and is soothed to sleep by the gentle fragrance as from a viniagrette. Do not despair of finding some one who still can remember the viniagrette, many of us do, even though our memory is confined to watching our elders enjoy the refreshing odor from these lovely bottles. Then before we reached the age to indulge—they were out of style.

A potpourri recipe from the Raleigh Garden Club reads: After sun has dried the dew, gather at least a peck of fragrant rose petals. Put them in a large glass container and sprinkle with 3-4 pound of salt. Let stand three or four days, and, if more petals are added, put in a little more salt. Add other fragrant flowers, if desired, such as lemon verbena, rosemary, thyme, tiny rose buds and corn flowers and delphiniums for color. Put in some orange peel stuck full of cloves or a small piece of cinnamon. Sprinkle with salt. Stir occasionally but keep in covered jars. Remove cover and stir well and leave open when fragrance is wanted in the room.

A few more things that are used in fragrance jars are, calamus root, myrrh, coumarin, nu tonka, musk aubrette, musk xylol, flower oils, lavender vegetable oils, tonka beans, vanillan, storaz, frankincense, orris root. There are so many others, but now is a wonderful time to begin making one of these jars. If there is anything of the old-fashioned southern lady left in you this will surely bring it out. I was benefitted by just looking, hearing and smelling them.

ATLANTA, GA., MAY 16, 1937.

AS TRUE NOW AS IT WAS THEN

There has been deep concern amongst the leaders of American thought that the "dole" under any form or however designated, would endanger the fine traits of character and the determination to progress upon which the American ideal was founded and under which this nation and its people have grown great and prosperous.

Even in the soul-trying days of the worst part of the depression, only the existence of lengthening bread lines reconciled many Americans to the adoption of a program of federal aid to those who, through no fault of their own, were without the power to supply themselves and their families with the necessities of life.

Largely as the result of this apprehension, outright federal relief to the able-bodied was soon discontinued and a program of work relief substituted.

Now, with the nation far along the highway to renewed and greater prosperity, there are disturbing signs that, at least to a certain extent, the fears of the deteriorating effect of the dole on American character were not unsoundly based. So evident is this, that the relief solution now presents one of the major problems ever faced by the American people.

More than a half-century ago, Henry W. Grady, under whose inspired leadership the manhood and womanhood of the south cast off the last shackles of despair and uncertainty remaining from the travail of the War Between the States and the Reconstruction period, uttered a soul inspiring warning against conditions that might undermine and sap America's most valuable asset—the virile and hardy character of the nation's men and women. He then wrote:

"Exalt the citizen. As the state is the unit of government, he is the unit of state. Teach him that his home is his castle, and his sovereignty rests beneath his hat. Make him self-respecting, self-reliant and responsible. Let him lean on the state for nothing that his own arm can do, and on the government for nothing that his state can do. Let him cultivate independence to the point of sacrifice, and learn that humble things with unbartered liberty are better than splendors bought with its price."

Such was the spirit upon which America was founded. The fathers of the nation were independent pioneers who faced the backbreaking toil of wresting a living from the wilderness in preference to ease without liberty, and who fought that they might have the right as independent men to carve their own destiny.

From that day until the advent of the recent depression the outstanding characteristic of the American people has been their dependence upon their own efforts even in the face of soul-searing adversity.

Those who were in need were cared for by their communities, by the church, and by local charitable organizations in a manner least apt to lessen self-respect or destroy ambition.

Unquestionably, the majority of those who have been forced to seek federal relief have maintained the heartfelt desire to reclaim financial independence resulting from the fruits of their own labor—as certain that in the case of thousands of others, both the dole and work relief, have worked to destroy vital traits of American character.

A continuance of this deplorable condition will affect not only those individuals directly involved but the nation as a whole.

There must come, as rapidly as possible, the end of the dole, whether open or camouflaged. The fact must be faced that in every state and community of the country today, men are choosing the lighter labor of relief employment in preference to independent work upon the farms and in industry. Despite a serious shortage of agricultural workers, men are refusing to leave the WPA rolls, where they receive $4.80 for two days work a week, for farm employment where they would have to work six days a week for $7.50.

The elimination of the evil cannot be expected to come from those on relief who are now evidencing a spirit of "Let Uncle Sam do it."

Uncle Sam cannot continue to do it in justice either to the people of the country as a whole or to those who are willing to look to him for the things they should be anxious to win by the sweat of their brow.

The government itself must lead in the elimination of this un-American and unsound system of care for the unemployed. It must do so in a humanitarian way in order that those who are worthy may not unnecessarily suffer, but it is clear that the emergent need which made federal control of relief necessary, no longer exists.

Henry W. Grady saw the truth with clear vision a half-century ago. His words are a safe and sound guidepost towards the solution of the grave problem America faces today:

"Let the citizen cultivate independence to the point of sacrifice, and learn that humble things with unbartered liberty are better than splendors bought with its price."

FREIGHT RATE OUTLOOK BRIGHTER

The conference of southern governors and their representatives, held in Atlanta last week, holds high promise of success in its campaign to remove the unfair differential in railroad freight rates under which industry in this section operates.

For more than half a century class and commodity rates on shipments originating in the south have been higher than on shipments originating in the north or east. This has been true even in instances when the length of the haul has been shorter from the southern points of origin.

Efforts to remove this handicap against the southern producer and manufacturer have been mostly along unorganized and spasmodic lines in the past, and have, not surprisingly, always ended in failure.

Now, with the Southeastern Conference, an organization including the public utility commissions of all the southern states and with the southern governors presenting a united front, there is sound hope rates from the south may be placed on a parity with those in other sections.

The plan of campaign laid down is one which holds every promise of success. The Interstate Commerce Commission has promised hearings on the problem, though no definite dates have yet been set. In the event the south is unable to secure the desired relief from the I. C. C., it is planned to carry the question before the courts. Able legal counsel is to be employed to present the case on behalf of the southern shippers.

There is no defensible reason why southern shippers should continue under this handicap in their competition for the markets of the nation. By presenting a united front and by continuance of effort until the desired objective is gained, the southern governors will move toward the elimination of these unjust and unfair rates in the most promising campaign to this end which has thus far been attempted.

A CHALLENGE AND A THREAT

Georgia possesses in her forests a natural resource of wealth practically unbounded. From her 23,000,000 acres of commercial forest area this state in years to come may reap a harvest which will keep her forever in the forefront of prosperity.

Yet, it is vitally essential that fullest protection be thrown around this natural wealth. In a communication published today on the opposite page, Jesse Mercer, long an advocate of wise conservation, points out in detail the menaces which now face the timberlands of Georgia.

First of these is fire. Annual loss from forest conflagration runs high into the millions. The state should, at once, provide organized protection in every timber area.

Secondly, laws should be passed to halt the complete devastation of large tracts which frequently follow the establishment of large pulpwood mills. Two of these industries are already established in Georgia and there is a third, just over the borderline in Florida, which gets much of its raw material from this state.

Those industries are welcome and Georgia has extended full appreciation of their value to the industrial development of the state. Yet, if they are permitted to denude the forests and leave in their place vast tracts of bare land, subject to the ravages of erosion, they will prove more of a curse than a blessing.

The casual advice to plant a tree for each one cut down is not enough. There must be systematic cultivation of the forest as a crop, in the hands of fully trained experts, just as other crops are produced.

Conservation today means continuing wealth for the future. Neglect spells a forthcoming ruin which will leave the fair acres of the state a barren waste, a ravaged scar upon the surface of the earth.

THE ROSE SHOW

Next Tuesday the annual state-wide Rose Show, sponsored by the American Rose Society, will be held at the Biltmore hotel. Rose growers from anywhere in Georgia can have exhibits. Any amateur with as many as 25 bushes is eligible. There is a lengthy list of classes, ranging all the way from single blooms to the most elaborate of table displays, with prizes and medals for the various winners.

The Cherokee Rose is the state flower of Georgia. The rose, through the centuries, has always been regarded as the most beautiful of all flowers. Other varieties of bloom have their champions, but over all the world the rose has always stood as the example of nature's most perfect beauty.

Men, as well as women, are found among the rose lovers. In past years some of the most coveted prizes at the Atlanta show have been won by men.

The men and women who carry within them that love of beauty which inspires the labor involved in the production of roses are of that type of citizenship which lifts the world to nobler understanding of the brotherhood of man and the glory of God's handiwork.

"THE HARD WAY"

The Constitution publishes today, on the opposite page, a communication from Bishop Warren A. Candler, drawing attention to a recent letter written by United States Senator Bailey, of North Carolina.

Few finer explanations of the duty of a man in public office have been written than this. Senator Bailey, giving his views on his duty to his constituents and the office he holds, emphasizes that the way of honesty is often the hard way, but that it must be pursued by any man worthy of his responsibility.

The Constitution is indebted to Bishop Candler for the privilege of publishing Senator Bailey's letter. It should be read, not only by those who hold office, but by the public, that government service in America may be viewed more generally as service and not as the spoils of political victory.

Notre Dame finds that the light rays from stars tire before they reach the earth. Some had wondered if Hollywood wasn't mistaking anemia for glamour.

TEXT AND PRETEXT

By M. ASHBY JONES.

Liberal-Conservative

There are two types of minds familiar to us all. One is the mind-set of the man who has an inherent and constitutional objection to change. His opinions on all subjects are fixed — his mental house is furnished, and must not be disarranged. His viewpoint of life is established and his mental habits, formed long ago, carry him easily and pleasantly along familiar pathways. The acceptance of a new idea would mean the disarrangement of all his mental furniture. It might mean the change of his intellectual residence, with a totally new outlook on life. So the very suggestion of a new idea is disconcerting. He lives smugly and snugly, with the consciousness that he possesses all the truth.

M. Ashby Jones.

Then there is the other, opposite, type of mind which is childish in its superficiality. It quickly tires of all that is familiar, and turns with eager enthusiasm to that which is novel. It thrills with a new sensation, is tickled by a new fancy, and delights in the glitter of that which is freshly painted. Such mental fickleness would toss aside all the wealth of experience, which has been gathered by intelligent selection by past generations. There is no consciousness of continuity in history, and no sense of appreciation of a purpose in the evolution of human experience.

Revelation of Truth.

From neither of these two groups shall we look for any leadership, nor hope for any progress. But there is another far better attitude of mind. I have called it the "Liberal-Conservative" attitude. No one has described that type of mind so well as the great Christian Apostle Paul, when he said: "Quench not the spirit. Prove all things. Hold fast to that which is good."

The significant presumption, which is involved in this exhortation, is that all truth has not been revealed. It is particularly significant for the great apostle to say this, because he of all men had, perhaps, been favored with the fullest revelation. His faith is that the "Spirit of Truth" which Jesus promised, lives and is anxious to reveal more truth to the sincere searcher after the truth. "Quench not the Spirit"—do not shut the windows of your soul so that the light may not enter. Do not close your mind in dull satisfaction, believing that there is no more truth to be revealed. The attitude of the true lover of truth, should be one of expectancy.

Jesus taught this so clearly when He told His disciples: "I have many other things to say unto you, but ye are not able now to understand them. However, when I am gone, I will send you the Holy Spirit, and He will lead you into all truth." It is little short of a tragedy that so many Christians have come to identify the presence of the Holy Spirit with the stimulation of the emotions. The coming of the Spirit in the teachings of Jesus is always an appeal to the intellect. Jesus speaks of the coming of the Spirit as "the Spirit of truth," and says, "He shall teach you all things." The Spirit is essentially the divine tutor of the mind, and through the mind the emotions are aroused.

Let us beware then that we do not limit God's revelation of truth by closing our minds. Such an attitude is nothing less than the silencing of the divine voice in one's own soul. Thus may one put out the light of heaven, and leave his own soul in darkness. There are indeed many timid souls who are afraid of more light. Afraid it may reveal the falsity of that which they have guarded with fierce zeal as the final, and complete revelation. This attitude is the essence of infidelity. It is to doubt the spirit of God, which is the source of all truth.

Testing Truth.

But this exhortation of Paul's is very far from saying that one must accept everything that claims to be a revelation of truth. One is to "prove," or test, "all things," and be sure to "hold fast to that which is good." "That which is good." In modern phrase, that which "has made good." That which has passed through the fiery furnace of experience without being burned up. That which cast a radiant light along one's pathway in those midnight hours of life. That which surcharged the soul with courage in life's fiercest battles. One must not only "hold fast to that which is good," but he must test every challenge to faith in the new, by that which has already proven itself to be good.

It will not be the same, but it will be of the same kind. It will be a different note of music, but it will harmonize with the music which has already thrilled the soul with its beauty. It will be a different color, but it will blend with the beauteous coloring which one already possesses. We need not be afraid of new truth. There is but one Spirit of Truth. Yes. He will manifest himself in ten thousand times ten thousand forms and formulas, and translate Himself into every language which men may speak. He may be found in laboratories and observatories in fields and forests, for His glory is proclaimed not only in the stars of the heaven, but in the seeds of the earth. A liberal-conservative, is one who having found some truth, in the joy of its possession, is in eager search for more truth.

"As tide on a crescent sea-beach, when the moon is new and thin,
Into our hearts high yearnings come welling and surging in.
Come from a mystic ocean, whose rim no foot hath trod.
Some call it inspiration, but others call it—God."

Silhouettes

By RALPH T. JONES

For man rides high
And man rides far,
Man tames the waves and the air,
For man feels kin
To the distant star
Agleam in the heavens fair.

The lightning flash
And the thunder roll
Serve his hungry pride,
The only thing
He can't control
Is the tug of his heart, inside.

The Constitution's Ancestor.

There is, in front of me as this is written, a copy of "The Weekly Atlanta Intelligencer" of the date of Wednesday, March 6, 1861. That paper, as you know, later changed its name to The Constitution. Thus it may truthfully be described as the father of your favorite morning newspaper of today.

Sight of this old paper is due to the courtesy of George P. Crumbley, of 1411 Fairbanks street, S. W. Mr. Crumbley found it in the attic of his old home near McDonough, where his family have lived for generations and where his father, V. L. Crumbley, still resides.

At the time of this publication The Intelligencer was published by "Gaulding, Whitaker & Miller, Proprietors." It consisted of four pages only and the subscription price was $2 "per annum in advance."

There is a lengthy article on the front page in support of Major R. F. Maddox, a candidate for Colonel of Fulton County.

There is a letter to "Messrs. Editors," from "The Hon. Z. B. Vance, of North Carolina," stating that inclusion of his name as one of the managers of Mr. Lincoln's Inaugural Ball was without his knowledge or consent.

"I beg leave," writes Mr. Vance, "to decline any part in tendering an invitation even to the first Magistrate of the Nation, when he comes with threats of war and subjugation against my section upon his lips."

The southern states had seceded from the Union. War had not yet broken out, but there were rumors of forthcoming hostilities on every side. The paper was full of reports of feverish preparations for service by various military organizations.

It reported the sessions of the Confederate congress at Montgomery, including passage of an act establishing a general staff for the Confederate States.

It tells of the presentation of a banner, by the ladies of Cherokee county, to "The Cherokee Brown Riflemen."

An Editorial Overly Confident.

The leading editorial deals with the bright prospects of the newly formed Confederate States of America. It said:

"Our Government will be speedily recognized, and treaty stipulations will be formed with all the great powers of Europe, and with the Northern Republic on our own continent, for it will be to the interest of all, that we live in peace with each other. . . .

"The time for wars and conquests is gone. Wealth, happiness and prosperity, follows in the train of peace. Poverty, destruction and death, follows in the train of war.

"But should war be forced upon us, we are the strongest nation on the earth at home. The North could never conquer us. That would be an impossibility.

"A war would almost depopulate the entire North in one year. Her commerce and manufactories would be destroyed, and the labor and capital of that section, would meet each other as demons, each striving for mastery. Labor would, in the end, conquer.

"The working population of the North would become paupers, and this miserable, wretched, white population, would clutch at the throats of the monied power—strangulation would follow, and the whole fabric of free society would tumble to the ground, in one common ruin. . . .

"Let us go on then, in the good work we have inaugurated, until our grand temple of liberty is complete in its every part. A bright future is in store for us. Let national glory, prosperity and integrity, go hand in hand. Let us never forget that "The greatest glory of a free-born people,

Is to transmit that freedom to their children."

Well, They Dreamed The Good Life.

Even in those days, you see, they thought "the time for wars is gone." Someday, it may go. But not yet, not yet.

Still, the editorial writer of The Intelligencer wrote pretty well in 1861, didn't he?

Twenty-Five Years Ago Today.

From The Constitution of Thursday, May 16, 1912:

"The vice commission held its first meeting and was formally organized yesterday afternoon in the mayor's office. The members discussed in detail the work that was expected of it in the suppression or abatement of the 'social evil,' decided to ask the police department to detail a special officer to make investigation, and request council to appropriate $250 for incidental expenses."

And Fifty Years Ago.

From The Constitution of Monday, May 16, 1887:

"Lumpkin, Ga.—Hon. W. H. Harrison, of Atlanta, is in town, spending a few days with his brother, and is now off on a fishing frolic with some of the boys. We are always glad to see Tip's genial countenance and listen to his inimitable style of telling an anecdote."

Minneapolis

By GEORGE SOKOLSKY.

So I argued with Sam, who was in Chicago, to wait for me until I returned from Minneapolis. Well, Sam could spend a day in Chicago even if sales were falling off because prices were so high.

"There's two things about Minneapolis I don't understand," Sam announced as we settled down to smoke and play Russian bank. "One is why it stays there and the other is St. Paul."

"Sam," I replied, "a city just grows. It doesn't always have a reason. Somebody who was born there starts a little business and it grows into a big business, and lots of people live there because they work there. Then more businesses come—so more people come."

"The businessman spends a million dollars looking fierce and then he plays golf on election day. Why the hell should any politician pay any attention to that kind of a citizen?

"And the labor leader, he knows when the opposition is licked. And why shouldn't he take advantage? Did you hear the one up in Minneapolis about the manufacturers who held a dinner and agreed to act together—united we stand, divided we fall—that kind of horse-feathers. So four hours later one of them signs up and the rest of the guys read it in the newspapers.

"A labor leader'd have to be a crazy galoot not to savvy a bunch like that. All he has to do is to see one break like that and he makes a run for the goal. And I'll bet you a million dollars that some of these boys that sign before they read paid plenty dough to the Liberty League and the Crusaders and all the pay-envelope stuffers to tell the worker they don't need unions. Boy, it's a sell-out and the labor leaders know it—and the politicians, they know all about it.

"So they stick around with the guys that show fight and vote on election day.

"That's the situation in Minneapolis. I know that town like a book. I knew Floyd Olsen, so I called him Floyd and he called me Sam. That was one smart hombry. Yes, sir, he used to be a Republican. So the Republicans didn't like him because he was a Swede from the Ghetto. So they gave him the razzberry and Floyd started this Farmer-Labor crowd.

"Don't let anybody kid you. Floyd was no more Communist than John Lewis is. But when Floyd couldn't play ball with the big shots he got up a gang of his own. And he took over Minneapolis and ran it like nobody's business. Floyd could make a speech which made a Scandinavian see a fjord in the dark. So they made him Governor.

"Now, when a politician can't play ball with the big shots, he plays minor league. But if he's smart he plays ball all the time. So Floyd Olsen attracted everything to Minneapolis that rolled on skates. Gangsters, labor racketeers, idealists, Communists, all kinds of gazabos who had to have a place to make speeches or work a trade. And Floyd could sing hymns to the social workers and talk turkey to the gangsters. And he had them in line most of the time.

"Of course, a gang like that runs off the reservation plenty. But he managed them pretty good. Then he died of a cancer and the show busted up because there was only one ringmaster in a six-ring circus and he was dead."

"Sam, what I can't figure is why an American town like Minneapolis can let three boys like the Dunne brothers take it over and run it as they please."

"I don't see why you can't figure that one," Sam replied with assurance. "It's the old racket Charley Murphy worked in New York. The Vare boys worked it in Philadelphia. Pendergast works it in St. Louis. What the hell—they work it where they can. That's politics. And every town has its white-haired boy who knows the works. You can't change human nature. That's why every American city must have a boss.

"These Dunne boys are smart Irishmen who run a teamsters' union. In the old days boys like that would be working the district clubs and in time each would be a Tim Sullivan. Nowadays that's a hard racket, unless you're on the inside. So these boys think up a new one. They build an organization around their union and instead of giving the boys a line about the low tariff they tell them that the bosses and Stalin are the nuts and Trotzky is a kind of international Father Divine.

"At the same time they tell a manufacturer: 'Sign on the dotted line with your machinists or the teamsters and trucksters and all the other movers won't move your goods.' And if the goods can't be moved they can't be sold. So this boss signs and the Dunnes run the unions and the town.

"Nuts to that!" Sam replied. "Minneapolis and every other town in this country is made up of plain, honest folks who go to church and like to see the kids sit around the table and who don't give a damn if Trotzky bites Stalin's ear or Stalin passes a remark about Trotzky's grandmother. These kind of Americans take a beating most of the time from the politicians because if it don't cost too much it's cheaper than getting excited.

"Then sometimes they get fed up with it all and forget how their old man voted after the Civil War. They get together and give the racketeer such a kick in the pants that he crosses the Atlantic and grows pansies in Paris.

"Boy, that's coming in Minneapolis. And it's coming in lots of other towns. That's why I'm a salesman yet. When the racketeers get theirs, I'll have a chance to make mine."

ON THE RECORD

By DOROTHY THOMPSON.

THE GROUSE OF THE ENGLISH

"Consider the English," my child, is a political wonder, said the Grouse, from behind the breakfast newspaper. "A most remarkable people. A nation, it is said, of shopkeepers. Producers of cotton textiles, woolen goods, coal, chinaware, the best men's clothes and worst women's, dealers in money, sharp traders, the ancestors of our own Yankees, who dealt in slaves and went to war to free them. Inhabiters of rows and rows of dingy little brick villas, each with a hedge to shield him from his neighbors. Prosaic and shrewd. Noted for common-sense, and a philosophy glorifying self-interest. Also noted for a love of nature, a passion for poetry and the world's largest and best production of it. By and large a dull people, with a positive dislike of intellect. Yet producing intellectural giants. Haters of war, who have indulged in as much of it as any race on earth. And at present engaged in a most amazing circus.

Dorothy Thompson.

"I presume you are referring to the coronation."

"The coronation is the world's greatest circus, with even the audience rehearsing. Voluntarily. Nobody makes 'em. Bishops and the archbishop; copes and scarlet; choir boys in blue coats and red stockings; fountains spraying perfume; eighteenth century coaches; King with five pounds of jewels on his head, and peers crowning themselves all around him. The whole world agog over a young man who six months ago was just a young rentier. Pomp and circumstance, with every one who manufactures or trades or has a room to rent raking in the shillings thriftily.

"And," continued the Grouse, "all this happening in a political democracy; where a King is shuffled off a throne most speedily and competently because the nation doesn't approve of his girl friend; where 44 per cent of the population call themselves Socialists and all except the Communists support the monarchy; where the Communist deputy arises in the house of commons to add his memorial to the tribute for Austen Chamberlain, Tory or Tories; where every man is fanatically jealous of his personal political opinion and his individual rights, and yet, in a showdown, always thinks and acts like an Englishman."

"And what, I ask you, does it mean to think and act like an Englishman?"

"A difficult question. Those who hate the British—and they are not innumerous, because Britain is powerful and strange—say it means to be a hypocrite. The French, a highly logical people, who admire the British, but are baffled by them, say that it means not to think at all, but to move around muggily by intuition. But I am inclined to think that among a vast number of qualities, the outstanding English quality is to know when to give in."

"Now, that is an odd thought."

"Think it over. Britain has held together a huge amorphous empire, not altogether by kind words and coronets; oh, no; a lot of force has been employed. But just the same, whenever the point comes that it's give in or suffer severe losses Britain gives in, and always with the appearance of great generosity and as though she always intended to do it anyway. So we have seen the transition from monarchial absolution to constitutional government to a semi-socialist state with an unparalleled smoothness, and the transition from centralized empire to a commonwealth of sovereign nations with never a complete break. And that, my child, is a political wonder.

"The British know, too, how to change the content and preserve the form. The crown, like our own supreme court, is a symbol of tradition and continuity in government. And, apropos the supreme court, if President Roosevelt was more English and less Dutch, he wold also know when to give in. He'd be pleased as Punch if a couple of resignations, or a switch of a vote accomplished his main purpose while preserving the traditional procedure. He would make the most gracious gesture. The members of the supreme court from Brandeis to Van Devanter have very strongly this consciousness of the importance of procedure, and it's my guess that they will one way or another save the situation that the President has created, save the court, and thereby, whether he knows it or not, save the face of the President—as Stanley Baldwin a few months ago saved the face of the King, against the King's own will.

"The English have ingrained in them two other things: Respect for personality and a deep, probably unconscious sense of legitimacy in government. You can make any kind of change you like in government, provided you make it inside established principles. That's what legitimate government is. And the crown is the symbol of that legitimacy. And because they feel this so deeply there has been only one revolution in England in a thousand years and that ended in restoration and compromise.

"There's a window in an English cathedral—Winchester, I think—that seems to me as expressive as anything in England of the British. It was a great window, storied and painted, and Cromwell's soldiers smashed it to bits. And after the soldiers had gone the people picked up the pieces and put them back again. There's hardly a piece of glass as big as your hand, and the picture which was there could never be restored, but they saved every inch of the glass. The moral being that you can make a revolution in England, but England remains."

The Grouse laid down the newspaper. "It amuses me," he said, "to imagine what England would be like if they ever established Communism. I can see the London Times. There would be the court calendar, with the words, 'Comrade, His Majesty the King was pleased to receive today'. And certainly some comrade would write in from Great or Little Snoring to express his surprise that another comrade had discovered a cuckoo singing earlier than a lark; and certainly we would hear Comrade Winston Churchill fulminating in the house on the counter-revolution in India or on the ideological heresies of Mr. Ghandi. I have no doubt that the royal garden parties would continue; Mappin and Webb would advertise cigaret cases monogrammed with hammers and cycles in rubies and pearls and the chief commissar would probably be the son of an earl."

"It all sounds a little mad."

"It does indeed," said the Grouse. "And the Mad Hatter was an Englishman, the March Hare an English beast and Alice in Wonderland remains the favorite English classic. The greatest poem any Englishman has written to English nationalism occurs in Richard II, and there's nothing in it about power or empire. Instead, it is an ode to 'this happy breed of men, this little world!' The English are, I conclude, a remarkable people, and though slightly mad, there is certainly method in that madness."

New York Skylines

By CHARLES ESTCOURT.

NEW YORK, May 15.—The ideas of morality that sprout along Broadway are complex, but at least they exist, and it seems important to point that out at a time when the annual morality drive is on and so many of the girlies are riding to court in patrol wagons.

There are, of course, bad eggs among the lot, but the majority of those you see snatched from their powders and perfumes to cower behind the wicker wire of the black maria are kids from the sticks, crazy for a break in the big time and ready to use any job as a stepping stone.

Once there was a nice little girlie from Arizona who made her living swimming at the bottom of a "wishing well" in a local night club. The local yokels paid a quarter and got a package full of powder. They threw the powder into the well. Then there was a flash and clouds of pink smoke. When the smoke cleared, you could look through the water and see our little girlie from Arizona swimming away down there without anything on.

It was done with mirrors, and that made it all right with the nice little girlie. "They can't really see me," she said seriously. "All they see is my reflection in the mirror."

Heloise Martin, that Drake University co-ed who hotted up things with a shower-bath picture, also had an angle on the business. She had posed, leering drunkenly, a cigarette dangling from her lips, a man dangling from one arm, a glass dangling from the other, for the cover of a picture magazine. Heloise's father is a retired naval officer and she herself has had the benefit of the rearing that generally indicates. She didn't think the picture was so nice either, but she insisted it was art. "I don't drink and I don't smoke," she explained. "To pose for that picture took acting. If I did smoke or drink, you can bet your life I wouldn't have posed that way."

Most of the burlesque queenies think that way, too. They feel that, because they aren't really what they make out they are, making believe they are what they really aren't is art and should be considered as such. The sentence may be complicated, but then so is the thought process of the average burlesque queenie.

As a matter of fact, I don't think much of the argument either. But it helps to explain one reason why the sewage merchants have been so successful. They've got nice girlies to help them peddle smut, and the nice girlies manage to stay nice by such prodigious efforts of the will as those cited above.

What's sad to see is downtown's desk-bound white-collar slaves spending their lunch hour piled up sidewalk deep before the outdoor-life displays in the sporting goods stores. Chiefly middle-aged and old, there are some pale and weak-eyed youngsters among them. But whatever their age, they all look hungry. . . . Edward G. Robinson, the professional tough guy, is not only an art collector, but whiles away his evenings twanging a harp.

State Department of Health Strides On in Public Service

Despite Paucity of Finances, Record Shows Great Progress

PART I.

The first record of any law pertaining to public health in Georgia was passed in 1732, appropriating 13 guineas for the relief of the sick and child-bearing women during passage to the province.

In 1866, the legislature passed an act for the control of smallpox in Georgia. The power to enforce this law was given to the justice of the inferior court (present judge of the superior court), and the corporate authorities of towns and cities.

In 1875, the legislature passed an act creating a State Board of Health. The law authorized the governor to appoint a physician of experience from each of the then nine congressional districts. These, together with the comptroller general, attorney general and geologist constituted the board.

The members of this board were: J. G. Thomas, M. D., Savannah; B. M. Cromwell, M. D., Albany; G. F. Cooper, M. D., Americus; F. A. Stanford, M. D., Atlanta; G. E. Lussdorf, M. D., Macon; G. W. Holmes, M. D., Rome; H. F. Campbell, M. D., Atlanta; H. H. Carlton, M. D., Athens; M. J. Hammond, attorney-general, Atlanta; W. L. Goldsmith, comptroller-general, Atlanta; George Little, geologist, Atlanta.

Dr. G. S. Thomas was elected president and Dr. V. H. Taliaferro was elected secretary and executive member at a salary of $1,000 a year. The members received personal expenses while engaged in duties of the State Board of Health. The work consisted of prevention of disease, promotion of public health, and the collection of vital statistics.

Delayed by Fever.

A meeting was held in Atlanta on October 10, 1876, all members being present except the secretary, who was delayed in Savannah on account of an epidemic of yellow fever. Doctor Taliaferro made a complete investigation of the origin of this epidemic, and reported that sailors on the "Maria Carlina," who had moved their bedding to a boarding house, brought the fever to Savannah. At that time sanitary conditions in Savannah were very poor and played an important part in the spread of the disease. Cases occurred in Augusta, Brunswick and Macon. On October 30, 1876, the Savannah Morning News stated that 8,000 refugees had left Savannah, and that the loss to the city was over one-half million dollars. The same article stated that Savannah had spent $120,833 for charity during the epidemic.

No appropriation was made to the State Board of Health for continuation of the work in 1877. Dr. Eugene Foster expressed his opinion of the failure of the legislature to provide funds for the work in his book, "From Memories of Georgia," written in 1877, as follows:

"Utterly devoid of appreciation of the possibilities and economy of a public health service, the Georgia legislature in 1877, blotted the State Board of Health out of existence by refusing to vote the paltry sum of $1,500 a year for its maintenance. This one act resulting from shameful ignorance has done more to retard the prosperity of the state than any other act since the establishment of the colony."

Second Board.

The second State Board of Health was organized September 10, 1903, under an act of the legislature. The board consisted of 12 members, one from each congressional district, appointed by the governor and the secretary. An appropriation of $8,000 was made. Dr. H. F. Harris was elected as secretary at a salary of $2,000 yearly. The remainder of the appropriation was to be used in the general work of the board.

After much difficulty in organizing and securing office space, the department began operation in a small room in the basement of the capitol in 1904, using a microscope and apparatus belonging to Doctor Harris. The first work was devoted to bacteriology, and the control of smallpox and yellow fever. Later, a vast amount of research work was done by Doctor Harris on the aetiology of pellagra. Although handicapped by limited resources, the early efforts of the State Board of Health are highly commendable.

At a meeting of the State Board of Health January 13, 1914, Dr. Harris expressed a desire to retire from public health work as soon as he could be relieved of his duties without prejudice to the work in order that he might devote his time and effort to research.

During 1914 the health laws of the state were amended by the passage of the Ellis health law.

At a meeting of the State Board of Health July 16, 1817, Dr. T. F. Abercrombie was elected secretary and registrar of vital statistics. He assumed charge of the work August 1.

The progress of the Georgia State Board of Health can be ascertained from the following history of the divisions and summary of the work accomplished during 1931:

Laboratory.

The laboratory was organized under the administration of Dr. Harris and formally opened January 1, 1905. For two years Dr Harris did all the work himself. In 1907 the work had greatly increased and an assistant and a clerk were employed. The manufacture of Pasteur treatment was begun in 1908. In 1909 an appropriation was secured for the manufacture of diphtheria antitoxin. The manufacture and distribution of typhoid vaccine was begun in 1912. During the first nine years of its operation, the laboratory examined 31,079 specimens, this service having expanded at a steadily increasing rate until in 1931, a total of 105,276 specimens were examined.

County Health Work.

A department of field sanitation was established April 20, 1910, with Dr. A. G. Fort as director. During that year 59 counties were visited, and 15,572 school children were examined clinically for hookworm disease. This work was continued for five years.

The first full-time county health project established in Georgia was in Glynn county early in 1914. Later in the year the Ellis health law, sponsored by Colonel R. C. Ellis, of Tift county, was passed creating a board of health in every county in the state. This law provided for the employment of a full-time county health officer upon two successive recommendations of the grand jury. Following the passage of this law, Glynn and Floyd counties adopted its provisions. Both of these counties have continued health work without interruption since that time.

Vital Statistics.

Georgia was the first state in the Union to pass a law requiring the registration of births (1823). This record, however, is not held by Georgia in regard to laws requiring the registration of deaths, as 17 states passed such laws before Georgia. Under the provisions of the birth registration law of 1823 the clerks of the courts of ordinary were required to register the names and date and place of birth of all persons reporting themselves to him or who might be reported by their parents or guardians.

The first law requiring the registration of both births and deaths was passed by the general assembly in 1875. Under the provisions of this law, the physicians were required to file certificate for every birth and death attended by them, with the ordinary of the county in which the birth or death occurred.

The present vital statistics law was approved August 17, 1914, but was not put into effect until January 1, 1919, due to lack of appropriation to enforce.

In 1921, Houston county refused to pay the fees for the collection of birth and death records on the ground that there was no provision in the constitution providing for such taxation. A case was instituted in order to test the constitutionality of the law. In November, 1924, the circuit judge decided that such payment was constitutional. Houston county appealed the case, and in June, 1925, the supreme court reversed the decision of the circuit judge, declaring that the payment of such fees was unconstitutional. This decision resulted in registration falling off about 30 per cent, and the state being dropped from the registration area in 1925 by the Census Bureau.

In 1926, at the extraordinary session of the legislature, a bill was passed, almost unanimously, proposing an amendment to the constitution legalizing the payment of fees by counties. The constitutional amendment was ratified at the state-wide election in November, 1926. On November 16, 1926, the Governor of Georgia proclaimed the constitutional amendment ratified.

Venereal Disease Control.

The division of venereal disease control was established in June, 1918, in co-operation with the surgeon general in an effort to send uninfected men to the camps. Rules and regulations pertaining to the control of venereal diseases were promulgated. During that year, the message of clean living was carried to approximately 90,000 people.

Through the co-operation of the medical profession, the United States Public Health Service, Emory University, and the State Board of Health an annual venereal disease clinic for post-graduate study was organized in 1919.

Child Hygiene.

The division of child hygiene was established in May, 1920; 22,301 school children were examined the first year; 14 clinics were held, and 54,103 bulletins on child care were distributed.

The Healthmobile, a gift of the National Phi Mu fraternity to the mothers and babies of Georgia, began operation in June, 1922. Since that time, every county in the state has been visited by this unit. During the last year of its operation, 1929, the Healthmobile personnel examined 5,576 infants and school children, and 15,898 defects were found in this group.

In conjunction with the American Child Health Association, a May Day program is put on each year.

At the annual meeting of the Medical Association of Georgia May 9, 1924, a resolution was adopted requesting the State Board of Health to take up the instruction of midwives and to supervise their work.

Sanitary Engineering.

The division of sanitary engineering was organized in 1920, and the work has gradually increased to its present scope. There are 275 public water supplies in the state, serving a population of 1,117,500; 222 of these supplies are under supervision of this division.

The first malaria control promotion was begun for the urban population, and has continued until practically all towns and cities are now accomplishing efficient malaria control work. By 1926, the amount of money spent by Georgia towns and cities for mosquito eradication and malaria control reached the sum of approximately $275,000

This division has also undertaken the problem of rural malaria control, comprising control of all large bodies of water for hydro-electric development. During 1931, there were 150,000 acres comprising 38 lakes under rigid malaria control. There were 314 ponds drained throughout the state, comprising 135 miles of drainage. This drainage was accomplished by the division engineers making surveys in 24 counties and supervising the work subsequently undertaken. The county authorities furnished the machinery and convict labor for this purpose.

General rural and municipal sanitary assistance was furnished for the prevention of diseases caused by insanitary environment.

Tuberculosis Field Clinic.

The diagnostic unit, consisting of a physician skilled in the diagnosis of tuberculosis, a nurse, an X-ray technician, and truck equipped with a complete X-ray laboratory, visited 36 counties during 1931. There were 5,782 primary and "check up" examinations made of persons who gave clinical indications of tuberculosis, or who had lived in close contact with a tuberculous person. Of those examined, 1,389 were found to be suffering with active tuberculosis and 654 were regarded as suspicious and scheduled for further observation.

A large per cent of those diagnosed as tuberculous was discovered while the disease was incipient, at a time when a minimum amount of care is much more effective in accomplishing a cure than would be major efforts and a maximum expenditure several years, or even months later. Both positive and suspicious cases were placed under the care of physicians of their own choice.

The value of this work can be realized when it is known that, in addition to the grave importance of discovering the disease in its early stages, the average cost of patients treated at Alto is $400.85 (1930); the cost to the state, per patient, of the services of the field clinic is less than five per cent of the sum expended per patient in the cure of this disease. By far the greatest worth of this service is the chance of a healthy, useful life given to those found with incipient tuberculosis.

The field clinic work is carried on through co-operation with the state tuberculosis sanitorium, the Phi Mu fraternity, and the State Board of Health.

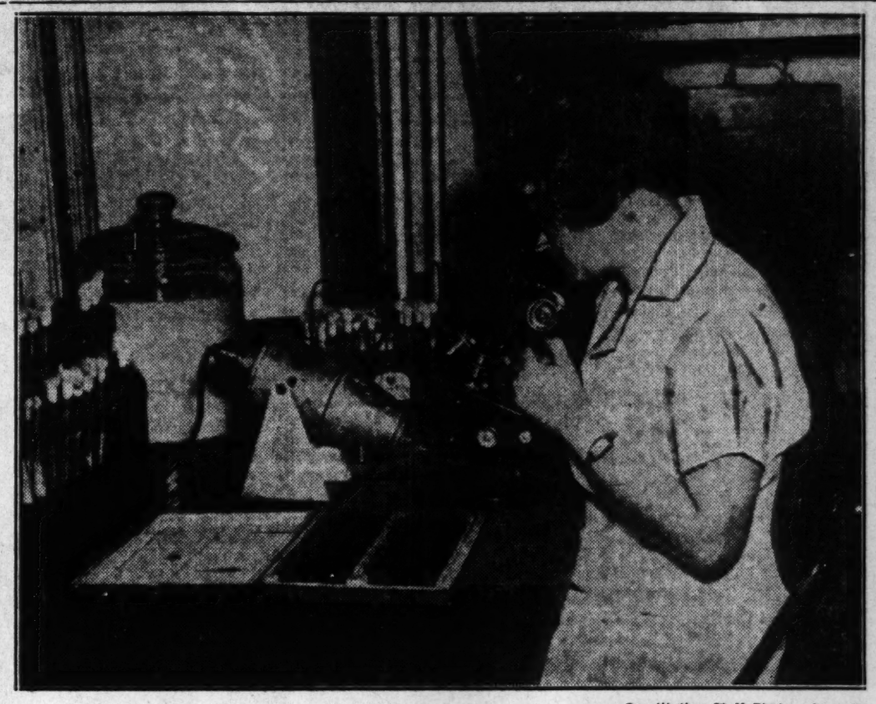

Trachoma Work.

At the request of the state health officer, an investigation of trachoma was instituted in Mitchell county in September 21. Dr. I. W. Irvin, of Albany, had been receiving patients from Mitchell county that he believed to be suffering from trachoma. Since the patients lived at some distance and did not co-operate in the treatment, it was more or less unsatisfactory. Doctor Irvin reported this, and the Public Health Service was requested to determine the real nature of these cases. Investigation showed a serious condition in Mitchell county. The plan outlined for the relief of the situation was a trachoma clinic. The clinic was in operation from November 14, 1921, to April 1, 1922. During that time, 3,111 cases of trachoma were diagnosed and treated; 381 operations were performed for various conditions of the eye, nose and throat.

Due to the fact that a number of cases of trachoma were discovered early in the year 1931 in the southwestern part of the state, request was made to the surgeon general for the assistance of a trachoma expert, which request was granted. From February through July, 720 cases of trachoma were located in nine counties. All of the cases found were treated, and 135 operations were performed. The United States Public Health Service withdrew their active support August 1, and the legislature appropriated $10,000 to continue this work. Beginning in September, arrangements were made to take over the work, and since that date 219 additional cases of trachoma have been located and put under treatment; six operative clinics have been held. This disease is now being found in other sections of the state.

Sterilization, that important phase of science's fight against disease, is a big factor in the State Department of Health. Mrs. E. A. Sullivan, technician, is shown placing test tubes into one of the sterilizers here. The modern equipment is part of Georgia's lineup in the battle against sickness. High temperatures within the sterilizers kill bacteria. The care in handling is apparent.

The relentless war on disease moves along the Georgia front as the State Department of Health fights consistently to do its share in science's war to control and eliminate physical ills. A "scout," Miss Rebecca Davis, technician in the microscopic department, peers intently into a microscope in search of bacteria. She is but one of the many enlisted in the state's battle against disease.

Carolina Senator Lifts Beacon of Truth In Public Service, Says Bishop Candler

Editor Constitution: Writing in reply to a recent criticism Senator Bailey, of North Carolina, has made a very important deliverance that ought to be preserved, and published far and wide.

He is speaking of taking the "hard way" for himself, and in doing so he commends that way to others. The "hard way" is not the easy way, but it is the right way.

Too many young men are now hunting the easy way; they wish to escape criticism and reach desirable objects without pain or effort.

But such is impossible. Our Lord taught that the path of righteousness was a narrow way and a hard way. So He Himself found it; and so everyone that walks in the path of duty and conscientiousness will find it.

The Senator's Letter.

In his letter to his friend Senator Bailey says:

"That is a strange picture you paint of me—as a man indifferent to the opinions of his fellows.

"On the contrary I know of no man who craves agreement with his fellows more than I do—nor do I know one who more highly esteems their applause and good will; no one is more tempted than I to cater to popularity; no one more averse to going against the tide of public opinion. It is the hard way. And like all men, I would have for myself the easy way.

"But there are other considerations.

"I remember one Pontius Pilate. He pleased his crowd and let them slay their best friend. He went the easy way. So he held the governorship. I do not admire him, but he was a smart politician.

"I remember one Peter—a fisherman, who declared to the people demanding that he agree—we ought to please God rather than men. He went the hard way. They tell me he lost his life on a cross. But I admire him.

He Discovered America.

"I remember Christopher Columbus, the majority of whose sailors demanded that he turn back, but who nevertheless pressed on. He went the hard way. He was most unpopular with his crew. But he discovered America.

"I remember Moses who chose to dwell in the tents of the wandering tribes of Israel rather than the palaces of the Pharaohs. He went the hard way. He died in the wilderness, but God gave him a mountain top to die on; and he is still on the mountain.

"I remember Him who said to the Pharisees 'Your fathers stoned the prophets and you build monuments to them.' He knew the hard way. He died on the instrument of the slave's torture. But all men look to Him on that cross.

None Popular Men.

"None of these were popular men. They, unlike Pilate, went against the tide of public opinion. None of them was ever governor.

"I remember Emerson and his great essay on self-reliance, in which he bade every man speak his own thoughts, do his own duty as he sees it, saying that that was the only way to serve one's fellows. That this is the way one created in the image of God ought to do.

"When I was a young fellow and all the way of life was unknown to me, my teachers urged me to have the courage of my convictions. My Sunday school teachers would tell me to 'dare to be a Daniel.' Do they yet do this? Or do they teach their pupils to have the courage of, say, the President's convictions? I thought that the way of the courage of one's convictions was the easy way. Imagine my surprise upon finding it so invariably difficult these 40 years as editor and public man. Should they have taught me to dodge and duck and squirm and hide behind every bush and so get through this life like a serpent gets through the grass? Is that the advice you give your young readers? And would you have the high schools set up a department of demagogy and give diplomas for proficiency in sitting on a 10-rail fence and keeping both ears to the ground?

The Light to Guide.

"You say I rely upon the past. It was Patrick Henry who said that he had no light to guide him save the light of the past. If you know of any other tell me what it is and where to find it. That and that inner light which we are told God kindles within one's soul—these only are known to me. But if there is yet another, tell me the way to find it; for I know I need every possible light.

"Do you think that I do not know the easy way. Do not think that I could not choose the easy way. Do not think that I do not see around me men who have successfully made a business of holding office, and who all their lives have held office by finding the course that pays the best—in votes—and 'going for it bald-headed.' They do not have to contend. All they have to do is to deceive. But I have deliberately chosen not to go that way. I am determined to do the best I can for the people who have trusted me, whether it pleases them at the time or not. I am thinking of their children no less than of them. I may be wrong, but if I do my duty as I see it, I shall at any rate have the satisfaction of a good conscience.

"We all admire Henry Clay for saying that he had rather be right than president. Why do we so often tell public men that it is better to be popular than right? Shall we reverse the story and say that Henry Clay was a fool?

Duty of Newspapermen.

"And let me say that the same duty falls upon newspapermen as upon public men. I was made sick at heart recently when a prominent newspaperman said to me: 'You know we newspapermen are merchants. We have to give the people what they want.' He was more interested in making money than in doing right. He was selling opinions as a merchant sells cabbages.

"It may pay to pander to the multitude, but it is fair to them? Is it right?

"Would you have me conduct a poll on questions of public policy, ascertain on which side the most voters are, study the way to get myself re-elected, or would you have me study these questions and do my duty? And if I do this, am I to be portrayed as indifferent to opinion, or obedient to duty? Which is the selfish way? Am I here to serve myself or the people? And if here to serve the people, shall I seek to do the popular thing and get the popular applause and hold on to my office, or shall I seek to do the right? You cannot answer these questions for me. I have answered them within my soul. I shall do my duty.

Subservient Judges.

"I do know some history, and I know that the most horrible chapters in the history of mankind were written by subservient judges. I know how blessed have been the fruits of the success of that great struggle. I know that I can render no greater service to my generation than by resisting to the utmost every step to impair that independence. And I am determined to render that service. It will justify my existence.

"History also teaches me that second thoughts are more to be trusted than first thoughts; that reason is better than impulse; that the long view is better than the view of apparent immediate self-interest; that the best friends of the people are not those who appeal either to their prejudices or emotions, nor who agree with them just to please, nor those who make the loudest professions of interest in them; that one who would serve them must study measures and seek the right; that men engaged in the tasks of life have but little time for study or meditation, and that if some one does not study for them they will learn only at the cost of bitter experience, and that one honest man who will tell them the truth is worth ten thousand who are content to agree with them rather than take their criticisms or their curses. And history also tells me that in the long run only the men who are willing to pay this price receive the rewards of grateful posterity, or the satisfaction of duty done.

"So, if I have made my choice, you must say that I chose 'the hard way;' that I did not choose it because I was a fool, or wilfully; that I chose it unselfishly, not for my own ease or interest, but for the people who have trusted me and honored me."

That is lofty talk, and worthy of all acceptation.

He draws his slender bow across the strings
And from them with true artistry he brings
Arias, haunting in their sweetness.
Bare notes maddening in their fleetness.
Melodies, varying and unending.
Dirges, full of earth's griefs, heartrending;
Songs of triumph and paeans of gladness;
Serenades inspired by Love's sweet madness.

Across the strings he draws the trembling bow;

The Happenings of The Church World

By HERMAN L. TURNER, Pastor, Covenant Presbyterian Church, Atlanta, Ga.

Ministers in state legislatures—according to a survey recently made by the N. C. J. C. news service, 34 Protestant ministers are members of state legislatures in 21 states. In addition, one minister is in the United States senate and another is a member of the house of Representatives. Iowa has a minister as its secretary of state.

An increase, over the previous year, in the distribution of the scriptures, both at home and abroad, of more than a half million copies (542,205) was reported by the American Bible Society at its 121st annual meeting held on Thursday, May 13, at its headquarters in New York City. During 1936 there were distributed by the society 290,003 Bibles, 398,486 testaments, and 7,079,822 portions of the scripture making a grand total of 7,767,311 volumes in 166 languages and dialects and in an additional 26 characters including the different systems for the blind. The inclusion of the year's distribution brings a grand total of volumes of scripture distributed by the American Bible Society, since its organization in 1816, to 276,354,391 volumes. Workers, or colporteurs, to the number of 2,898 helped in the distribution, more than a thousand being volunteer workers.

In the United States.

The work of the Bible Society in the United States is divided into 10 districts with an additional four divisions taking care of the work among the negroes.

Two important services given by the society last year were the provision of scriptures for the young men in the CCC camps, who received through their chaplains nearly 47,000 scripture volumes. Since the organization of the camps several years ago, the society has spent almost $10,000 in providing with scriptures the promising young Americans enrolled in them. Early in 1936, for the various flooded areas throughout the United States and the two sections in the south struck by tornadoes the society distributed nearly 11,000 volumes, of which about 3,000 were entire Bibles.

Scriptures were provided by the society to the American Sunday School Union, national missions boards, government homes and hospitals, army and navy chaplains, orphanages, homes for the aged, welfare workers in municipal hospitals, and to other organizations and worthy individuals.

The Work Abroad.

Six of the society's 12 foreign agencies are located in Latin America. In Mexico an increase in circulation of 10,000 scripture volumes was reported. More entire Bibles were sold last year than in any year since the beginning of the society's work there nearly 60 years ago. More volumes were placed in circulation in Brazil during 1936 than in any year since the work was begun there in 1876. More than 13,000 entire Bibles found their way to new owners. In Argentina a gasoline tax is being used to build fine roads through the country so that the very remote places can soon be reached with Bible coaches, three of which are already going into the towns and villages—a new one having been equipped and placed in service last year. The work in this agency of the society employs five full-time colporteurs, one of whom owns his own Bible coach, another operates a launch, and a third over 80 years of age makes his rounds riding a small two-wheeled cart.

First Baronets.

The first baronets were created in England by James I May 22, 1611, as a means of raising money. He sold the title to all comers for the equivalent of $5,000. Most existing English titles were sold over the country; and "nobility" is conferred today upon cash contributors to the political party in power.

The Forestry Situation in Georgia

Editor Constitution:

Richly endowed by nature with those factors of climate and soil which are favorable to forest growth, the state of Georgia possesses a natural timber resource which, if properly managed, will contribute permanently to the prosperity of the state. With a total land area of somewhat over 37 million acres, it has approximately 23 million acres of commercial forest area, nearly 5 per cent of the commercial forest lands of the entire United States. Of this area, 269,000 acres (slightly over 1 per cent) is in national forest lands, with 11 million acres in farm woodlands and 12 million in forest lands in industrial ownership. Uncontrolled cutting of this stand of timber will bring irreparable damage to the state.

Of recent years there has been an increased trend in the movement of the pulp and paper industry to the south. Attracted by the existing stand of raw material and the possibility of low manufacturing costs, many large pulp and paper mills have been and are being constructed in southern states. At the present time, Georgia has two large capacity plants in active operation—the Union Bag & Paper Company at Savannah, with approximate daily consumption of 680 cords of pulpwood, and the Brunswick Pulp & Paper Company, at Brunswick, with approximate daily consumption of 480 cords. This drain on the forest resource of the state will undoubtedly be augmented by the large plant of the Container Corporation of America, at Fernandina, Fla., with daily consumption of approximately 560 cords, and which, lying contiguous to Georgia, receives a large portion of its raw material from Georgia lands.

May Mean Devastation.

The requirements of a pulp mill as to raw material are such that in many cases all trees over five inches in diameter are usable material. The cutting of a stand of timber in a manner to secure the maximum amount of pulpwood therefrom, may mean the complete devastation of that tract; the removal of all usable pulpwood may leave a waste-land, barren and idle for the period of years which will be required to again bring it into timber production, such production of a timber crop being contingent on keeping the forest lands free from fire.

The seriousness of the fire threat is borne out by figures compiled by the Forest Service, which show that during the five-year period of 1931 to 1935, there was an average of 20,640 fires each year on forest lands which were owned by the state of Georgia or private owners. The average area burned over annually was 5,509,106 acres. The need for more adequate fire protection is apparent, and every acre of forest land in the state of Georgia should be placed under organized protection.

The wooded areas of Georgia are dotted with small wood utilization plants, such as saw-mills, turpentine stills, veneer mills, creosoting plants, etc. These individual industries, for the most part locally owned and a material contribution to local employment, will be dependent upon a continued supply of raw material, mostly of a sawlog class. The cutting of a timber stand to include the removal of all usable materials, such as is practiced by some pulp and paper mills, eliminates any possibility of these small plants securing a future supply of raw material which is necessary for their existence.

"Farm Forestry."

Supplementing the industrial forestry situation is the "farm forestry" phase. During 1934 (according to estimates of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics) farmers of Georgia received a total cash income of $4,695,000 from their farm woodlands, this farm forest crop ranking fourth among all crops produced in the state. In addition, they cut $2,752,000 worth of woods products from their lands which they used in the maintenance of their homes and farms. Here is a resource which definitely increases the farmer's income and a resource the harvesting of which seldom, if ever, interferes with his regular farm work.

Fundamental in a program to make every farmer and every timberland owner conscious of his forest resource as a stabilized source of uninterrupted financial return is the need for an aggressive and intelligent campaign of education and co-operation. The situation is both a challenge and a threat. Lack of planwise harvesting of this renewable natural resource may lay the foundation for an economic and social tragedy. Recognition of the situation and a prompt redemption of a public responsibility will bring with it a vital contribution to prosperity in the state of Georgia.

Conservation Needed.

In view of the era of wanton waste of Georgia's matchless forests, dating from the day General James Oglethorpe pulled himself up Yamacraw Bluff by the twigs on the bank of the then pellucid Savannah, is it not incumbent on the present generation of responsible men and women to face about and agree on a purposeful program of conservation?

The recent session of the legislature opened the way, in the act of March 5, 1937. Every thoughtful mind will agree that it is reasonable justice to generations of Georgians to follow. May the next legislature be brave enough to discourage annual conflagrations that every year destroy billions of young trees.

Gathering Momentum Daily.

The following editorial, referring to the daily column, "This Morning," by John Temple Graves II, which appears in The Constitution, is reproduced from the Journal of Labor.

MR. GRAVES' DAILY THOUGHTS.

"This Morning" is gathering more interest and momentum every day. As Mr. Graves presents his daily thoughts he challenges us to bestir our own thoughts. It seems to be easy and natural for him to generate cerebral activity. Taking his cue last Monday morning from the Farm Chermurgic Conference at Jackson, Miss., he waxed rather eloquent but nevertheless never strayed from the truth when he, after pointing out the place and value of chemistry, in the south particularly, made this classic comment:

"But chemistry alone cannot carry the south within striking distance of its solar walk or Milky Way, and the conferees at Jackson were advised of the fact, it seemed to us. Neither chemistry or machinery nor anything else with which men have learned of late to conquer and capitalize upon their physical world will carry far enough unless we develop ourselves as human beings equal to the physical sciences at our command. Great is chemical science today and mechanical science, but a greater science still is the science of human relations. Chermurgy can do miracles for the south, but not without sociology, too, and economics and education and psychology and statecraft. We need to listen to great voices and promises that come to us now in chemurgy's name but we must not be persuaded to neglect in that name the more important science of man himself."

That First Spring Day The Sun Came Out!

Didn't your heart
Fairly bubble over
With joy and shout
With gladness . . .
Feeling you had gained
A new lease on life . . .
Wearied by the winter's chill . . .
That first spring day
The sun came out?

And didn't you again
Start planning
And planting your garden
For lovely flowers,
Clearing away the rubbish
From the paths and hedge . . .
Whitewashing the fence
In reckless defiance
Of repeated showers? . . .

And jot down measures
For that lily pond
Or extra room
You'd always wanted . . .
(Ambition reviving
The fond high hopes each year) . . .
The first spring day
The sun came out? . . .

And didn't you rest awhile
On the little bench 'neath
The wild cherry tree
And try to remember
Just what it was You'd worried so about
Thru the past dark hours . . .
That first spring day
The sun came out?

THE WEEK'S Picture Show

Are Stars Important?

PEOPLE think of movies in terms of Shirley Temple and Robert Taylor and Garbo.

But when labor trouble came to Hollywood, we heard of a whole new set of picture people.

PICTURE SHOW now puts in a plug for the movie-makers who never get their faces in pictures — just their sweat, their sinews and sometimes their brains.

Don't take us too seriously, but figure out for yourself whether stars are the whole show in Hollywood.

ROCHELLE HUDSON has a very fine figure. She probably doesn't owe that figure to the studio cooks, but there are studio cooks and they fix meals for the stars. If stars' figures are important, so are the cooks.

Director Busby Berkeley was pouring his life blood into a picture when these candid shots were made. When you see the picture, you probably won't give a thought to Mr. Berkeley.

(At Right)
If John Barrymore is important, then so is this stage-hand who once helped him learn his lines.

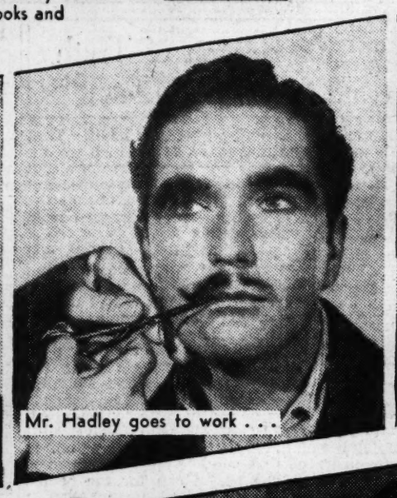

(At Left)

(Below, Left)
Roland Young "lays 'em in the aisles." But what about the man who writes those funny things for Mr. Young to say? Here is Mr. Young in a story conference with Writer Eric Hatch (center) and Director Norman McLeod (right).

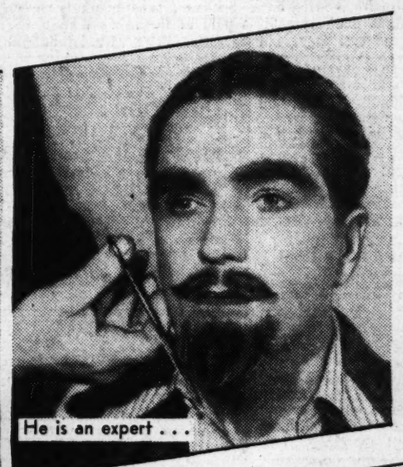

Bert Hadley is a makeup artist.

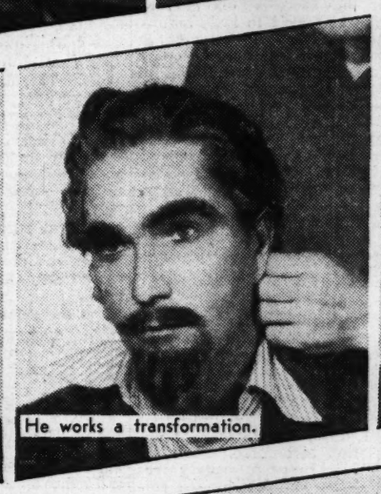

Roland Drew is an actor.

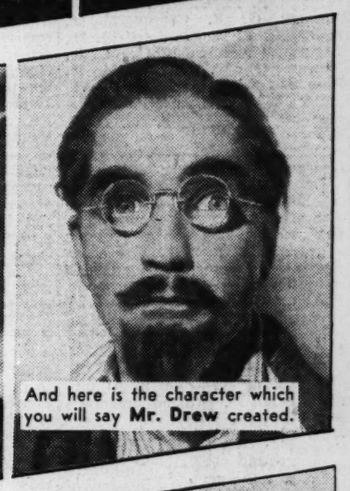

Mr. Hadley goes to work . . .

He is an expert . . .

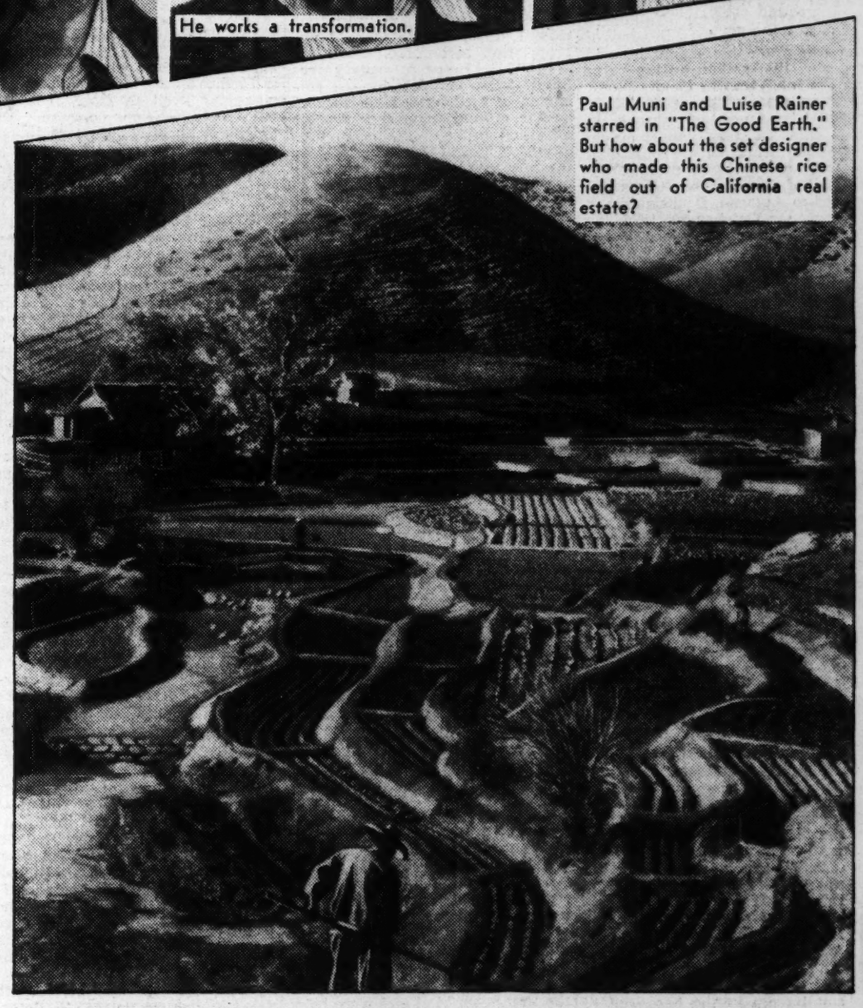

He works a transformation.

And here is the character which you will say Mr. Drew created.

Paul Muni and Luise Rainer starred in "The Good Earth." But how about the set designer who made this Chinese rice field out of California real estate?

Nelson Eddy and Jeanette MacDonald got top billing in "Maytime." But they would have looked pretty lonely without these bit players for a backdrop . . . and these fellows would have looked pretty silly if the costumers hadn't checked with the research department.

(At Right)
Harpo Marx loves to be funny off-stage while the cameras are rolling. Everybody laughs, and the take is ruined. Backstage employes, whom you never hear of, must watch him to keep him from spoiling his own pictures.

If Clark Gable is an important man in your life, the least you can do is offer silent thanks to the studio publicity department which arranges for pictures like these. Mr. Gable is a two-fisted outdoor man all right, but the press agents help keep him in form.

The WORLD This WEEK

Check-Up On Tragedy

LUCKIER than most disaster boards, the committee investigating the Hindenburg tragedy turned to photographs this week for a quick answer to the first of its two big questions: What happened?

The most vivid pictures of any disaster, snapped by cameramen focussing for a routine landing of the three-million-dollar dirigible, formed an invaluable pictorial history. Caption material was supplied by eye-witnesses, headed by Commander Rosendahl, U. S. navy expert on airships.

"I saw practically the whole stern of the ship take fire first."

First sign of the disaster, Rosendahl told the commerce department's board, was "a small burst of flame on the after part of the ship on the top. . . . My feeling was at once that it spelled the doom of the ship. . . . I saw practically the whole stern of the ship take fire first. . . . Then the fire spread progressively forward. . . . I ran from the vicinity and shouted for the ground crew to do likewise. . . . I saw the ground crew return almost immediately to the wreckage."

But neither the pictures nor the eyewitnesses could tell certainly why the ship burned, killing 35.

Bad Day For Hydrogen

QUESTIONING of Lieutenant May, who witnessed the explosion from atop the mooring mast at Lakehurst, N. J., was based on the possibility that a broken propeller blade had been hurled into the ship. "The first thing I saw and heard," he testified, "was the crack of the metal structure and I saw it come outside of the ship." Wood the size of a propeller blade might have made the same sound if thrown through the dirigible's frame, he said.

"I ran from the vicinity and shouted for the ground crew to do likewise."

As for static electricity, Rosendahl declared it normally is discharged through the trailer ropes to the ground. But Lieutenant Tyler, mooring officer, declared the ropes were too dry to ground it.

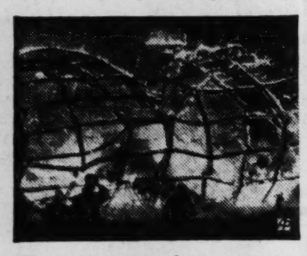

Other theories:

Lightning ("not to be feared," said Rosendahl).

Sparks from machinery (it was insulated, he said, and protected, "meticulously so").

Hydrogen might have set itself aflame.

Bomb and explosive experts of the New York police reported that they had found no evidence to support a sabotage theory.

"I saw the ground crew return immediately to the wreckage."

Whatever the cause, explosive hydrogen, lightest chemical element, may fill no more peacetime airships. Hereafter, said doughty Dr. Eckener, veteran dirigible commander, German ships must have helium only—element No. 2, non-explosive.

The trouble is, the U. S. has a corner on helium. And a wartime act forbids export. Congress this week considered easing the ban, but it moved cautiously. Common argument: any nation building dirigibles is looking primarily toward their use in war.

At the same time came reports that the American Zeppelin Transport corporation would build airships in this country if the government sold it helium reasonably and granted subsidies.

Personal Equation

Two airplane crashes near Newhall, Calif., last December and January killed 17 persons. This week the department of commerce held that pilots had been at fault for not making full use of radio facilities.

At Home

Come Again In Two Years

Sunburned President Roosevelt heard bad news as he traveled home this week from his fishing trip: the house had bucked him on the CCC issue. He had asked that the "tree army," his pet relief agency, be made permanent; the house voted 385 to 7 to extend it only two years. At the same time the senate labor committee reported the President's plan favorably. Possible reason for the house action: it's easier to get patronage when an agency's status is temporary.

Before heading north, the President told a Texas audience that the U. S. was spending 10 or 11 per cent of its income for defense, but was "not paying a high price." Said he: "Most of the nations of the old world are spending 30 and 40 and even 50 per cent of their government cost on their armies and navies. . . . Our preparation is honestly made for defense and not for aggression."

Boss's Chance

Only two American presidents—Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson — have been awarded the Nobel peace prize since it was established in 1900. This week the chances of a third President were heightened when Secretary Hull, eliminating himself from consideration, disclosed that he had seconded Cuba's nomination of F.D.R.

President's Shoes

Last July, James Brady, 9, of Philadelphia, got new shoes from President Roosevelt—because he'd worn out a pair trying to get to a Roosevelt speech. Last October, Brady was paroled from the house of detention, where he'd gone for stealing beer bottles. This week, Brady told Philadelphia police that he pushed John Stanton Tighe, Jr., 7, into the Schuylkill river. While police dragged the river, Brady ate heartily of frankfurters and cabbage.

Free Bill For Confederate

One measure promises to have easy sledding through the preponderantly Democratic congress: a bill to authorize a memorial highway marker for Jefferson Davis, president of the confederacy.

Right now congress is squabbling over a $3,000,000 memorial to Thomas Jefferson, also a well-known Democrat. But the Davis memorial will cost congress nothing. The United Daughters of the Confederacy, who plan a "suitable marker" at the District of Columbia's end of the Jefferson Davis national highway, want to foot the bill.

Bait

Young men and women, reasoned Dr. W. A. McKeever, might be glad to attend church if they knew services were exclusively for them. So the Oklahoma City psychologist announced formation of a "lovers church" to foster romance as well as religion. To the first service came 150 girls, six men. Said cheerful Dr. McKeever: "The men are just fraidy calves and it takes a little work to get them to come out."

In North White Plains, N. Y., the Rev. David Wesley Soper offered free transportation to anyone unable to get to the Methodist Episcopal church. Twenty-five members in a congregation of 150 took him up.

SCIENCE: Idle Thinking

"Stopping to think" may be a symptom of a mild form of epilepsy—if you don't think when you stop.

Boston doctors told the Pittsburgh meeting of the American Psychiatric association of a football player who suffered a blow on the head. Four years later he developed ordinary epileptic convulsions.

Then the brain "stethescope," recording the electrical pulse that flows from the mind, showed small mental disturbances that looked like epilepsy and happened a few seconds every minute. The boy thought he was thinking, but during the intervals he could not do arithmetic or write a sentence necessitating thought.

Fits of stubbornness or irritability may be indicative of similar trouble.

The psychiatrists also heard—

That a form of insanity may be caused by overindulgence in "sleeping powders." Already 114 "sleeping powder insane" have been admitted to Bellevue hospital, New York.

That the man who likes his father better than his mother has a better chance of being cured of chronic alcoholism.

That a Pittsburgh woman with only the left half of a brain is managing a household, leading a normal life and showing a high "I.Q." One explanation: In right-handed persons the left side of the brain may hold the seat of intelligence.

Helped By Hypnotism

Dr. D. M. Allan of Hampden-Sydney college has been hypnotizing college students to improve their grades. Once a student has gone into a trance, he is informed by Dr. Allan that his concentration will improve and his grades will get better. Dr. Allan worked on 62 students, he told the Virginia Academy of Science. Two jumped from failures in class to the honor roll. Fifty-five improved their grades. Five could not be hypnotized.

Pick Your Birthday

Dr. Ellsworth Huntington of Yale, who analyzed biographical dictionaries of six countries, reported this week that the more famous a man was, the more likely his birthday fell in February or March. Explanation: Nature intended children to be born between winter's cold and summer's heat.

Cementing The Ties

PEOPLE: Fascist Billionaire

Historian William E. Dodd, ambassador to Germany, has had four years to study at first hand the methods and results of a fascist dictatorship.

Wm. E. Dodd

This week he foresaw danger of such a dictatorship for the U. S. should the Democratic party break up. He had been told by personal friends, said he in a letter to Senator Bulkley of Ohio, that a man "who owns nearly a billion dollars" was ready to support the program and control it.

"I have studied our history for 40 years," he added, "and cannot help feeling that all of us who believe in our system must do what we can to support our President, even if we wish to amend some of his reform measures."

Bulkley explained that the letter had been written because Dodd "mistakenly thought I was wavering in my support of the President's court plan."

Other senators, opponents of the plan, suggested that Dodd ought to leave Berlin. None cared to speculate on the identity of the unnamed billionaire.

(The German propaganda minister's newspaper does not agree with Dodd. This week it, too, saw the U. S. drifting toward dictatorship — but communist, not fascist.)

Princes Prefer Commoners

Prince Charles of Sweden, nephew of King Gustav, renounced his rights of succession this week to wed Countess Elsa von Rosen, who is titled but not of royal rank. He will be the third Swedish prince to marry a commoner.

Count Covadonga, once Prince of the Asturias and heir to the Spanish throne, renounced his rights in 1933 to wed Edelmira Sampedro. She divorced him this week; the count said he'd marry Marta Rocafort, another Cuban commoner.

Berry Bothered

Now that cigar-chewing Major George L. Berry is in the senate, a lot of folks are wearing big grins. Administration leaders like the Tennessee Democrat because he likes the President's court program—his predecessor, the late Senator Bachman, had never committed himself. Labor likes him because he's president of the International Printing Pressmen's union.

Senator Berry

Large, florid-faced, Berry calls his acquaintances "pardner" or "old-timer," with a southern accent. Besides managing union affairs, he operates a color-printing plant, newspaper, cattle farm. To relax, he slumps in a chair, talks business.

The day after he was sworn in, a Tennessean filed a petition with the senate protesting that Berry was not entitled to a seat because of "certain allegations concerning his moral turpitude." Berry, said the petition, had been involved in a suit "said to have been brought for an accounting of funds due the pressmen's union, which were mis-appropriated by said George Berry." The petition was referred to the senate elections committee.

Zenobia Campbell, Arkansas negro farm woman, wondered how her own funeral sermon would sound. So she bought a coffn, hired a hearse and persuaded a minister to conduct her last rites. Too Many Jobs

Joe College is swamped with job offers, 76 campuses reported this week. All industries are bidding for 1937 graduates. Salaries are higher. Executive positions, especially those calling for knowledge of labor relationships, are easier to get. University placement directors are troubled: "More calls than we have men."

Quotes

General Dawes, banker, former vice president: "I predict, barring wars or inflation of the currency, that a high degree of prosperity will maintain in this country until 1939. That beginning . . . in the summer or fall of 1939, there will be a stock market collapse. That there will then ensue . . . a minor recession in business of one or two years."

Marlene Dietrich: "I consider Mr. Seiber the perfect husband and father. After saying that, it is unnecessary to add that these persistent rumors about a contemplated divorce are very, very wild."

Orange A. Olsen, forester: "The prairie chicken, the turkey vulture, the bald eagle, the wolverine and the grizzly bear—all five are in danger of passing from the American wild life picture."

Orry-Kelly, Hollywood fashion expert: "I am convinced these coronation gowns won't have any effect on styles in this country."

Abroad

Stop Press

Big news everywhere else in the world, coronation week was no news at all in Italy. For Il Duce, giving a new twist to international relations, broke off press relations with Great Britain.

From England he recalled all Italian correspondents; from Italy he banned all but three British newspapers. Primary reason: "The attitude of nearly all the British press against Italy and Italy's armed forces."

Rome papers covered the crowning in a sentence, gave more space to anti-English disorders in Dublin.

The ban, said a Rome official, would last as long as the newspapers' attitude remained "bad." "Badness" consisted in hinting broadly that Italian soldiers with Spanish insurgents were not so good. Items: that a blackshirt force was ingloriously defeated near Bilbao last week; that Italians were routed northeast of Madrid in March.

Newspapers in other countries published similar stories without drawing Il Duce's anger. But Britain long has been in Italian disfavor for other reasons: short of war, she did what she could to stop the Ethiopian campaign, which resulted in the formation of Italy's new empire just a year ago; also, she invited to the coronation a representative of Haile Selassie, deposed Ethiopian emperor.

Back of it all lie conflicting British and Italian interests in the Mediterranean. Britain wants control because the sea is a shortcut to India; Italy, so that she may never be separated from her African colonies.

Not the best of friends with either democratic Britain or France, fascist Italy has turned to fascist Germany for help in building up a friendly bloc (see map). Object: to ease her worries in Europe, leave her freer to concentrate on developing her empire.

To celebrate that empire's first birthday this week, Mussolini—like ancient Roman emperors — brought 10,000 colorfully garbed native troops from Africa, paraded them through Rome while a million Italians cheered.

Spain

Boom Time For Bombs

In Ethiopia a year ago, Italian bombers terrorized native warriors and smoothed the way for advancing fascists. But the African campaign was no great test for war planes because Ethiopia had few large cities to defend.

This week military experts focussed their eyes on northern Spain. Here, it seemed, was a first-rate proving ground. If strongly-defended Bilbao could hold out against a three-way insurgent drive by land, would it prove vulnerable from above?

In a preliminary test, General Mola sent an armada of German-made planes to bomb the outskirts. No great damage was reported, but Mola warned there was worse to come.

The Basques had two replies: they strengthened their defenses, continued sending women and children to France, evacuating 7,400 in five days.

Forty miles south of besieged Madrid, loyalists opened a drive to recapture Toledo, lost last October. Insurgents repulsed the first efforts, called loyalist losses "unprecedented."

(Also bombed: the "city of Los Angeles," outlined on the bed of Muroc Dry Lake, Calif. First losses in the army airmen's mimic warfare: a power plant, aqueduct, pier.)

Around Georgia

The Georgia High School Association's annual meet was held and awards were announced in sports and literary events.

Paul P. Whitaker, Waycross, was elected president of the Georgia division, Travelers' Protective Association, at its annual convention in Albany.

Miss Mary Mayo Bowden, of Savannah, christened the new United States navy cruiser Savannah at its launching at Camden, N. J.

Died: Dr. John Moore Reade, 61, long-time professor of botany and director of the biological laboratory at the University of Georgia, in Athens.

Chief O. J. Parker, of Atlanta, was elected president of the southeastern division, International Association of Fire Chiefs.

The Georgia Peach Growers' Exchange estimated this year's crop will be only one-third of a full crop, one of the smallest on record.

W. A. Etheridge, missing Augusta truckman, found in Florida, admitted first a kidnaping hoax and, second, a staged "murder" scheme to collect insurance.

Injunction against collection of Georgia's new truck tax was granted after the filing of two suits in Gainesville.

The Medical Association of Georgia met in annual convention in Macon and elected Dr. Grady N. Coker, of Canton, as next president.

Atlanta

Governors of eight southeastern states met in Atlanta last week to seek "parity" freight rates to encourage southern industry, Governor Rivers, of Georgia, being host to the visiting executives. Governor Bibb Graves, of Alabama, presided at the sessions. The group sought to end "discrimination" in regards to freight rates against the south.

Attempts to block the election of June 8 met with defeat as two Georgia judges declared the general election constitutional. Judge Berry T. Moseley, of Danielsville, and Judge J. H. Hawkins, of Marietta, refused to declare a temporary restraining order permanent.

The week also saw Odie V. Fluker, convicted for the murder of Eddie Guyol, Atlanta lottery king, fail in his plea for a new trial. Captain Ben Seabrooks, head of the Atlanta police department's fingerprint bureau, declared Fluker was "framed."

S.R.O. On Pall Mall

THE greatest show on earth played to a full house and a million or two standees on Wednesday though it was less dramatic than an over-ballyhooed circus parade.

Drama requires suspense; the coronation had little. Everyone knew weeks ago just what would happen during the procession.

They even knew what the archbishop of Canterbury would say to the king in Westminster Abbey and at what moment George would change St. Edward's crown (five pounds) for the imperial state crown (three and a half).

Only items undetermined in advance: the weather (a drenching rain); the number of those who would collapse in the crush (more than 7,000) and how Princess Margaret Rose, 6, would behave in the Abbey (she yawned at the archbishop and tickled her sister's arm).

Big Money Tune

NEVERTHELESS, it was grand spectacle, and 50,000 Americans got what they wanted—a fairly good look at the bewildering magnificence only a first-rate coronation can provide. Few of them could get inside the abbey (J. P. Morgan, invited by the king, was kept away by heart trouble). And only one participated in the ceremony—the Rev. James De Wolf Perry, Jr. (his role: to walk in and out of the abbey behind the archbishop of York).

But except for the actual crowning, strictly religious, coronation week was carnival time and anyone could join in. Hundreds of thousands did, jamming streets, restaurants and clubs, tooting toy horns, drinking countless toasts to the king (estimated beverage bill for Wednesday alone: $10,000,000).

The government's outlay was $2,000,000, twice what it spent for George V in 1911. But it started a $500,000,000 tune on empire cash registers.

Colorless hero of the colorful show was shy, serious George VI, at 41 the ruler of one-fourth the world although he never had expected to be king. He and his smiling Scottish queen went through the elaborate, oft-rehearsed ritual without a hitch.

After The Show

MORE important than the crowning itself was the opportunity it gave for dominion prime ministers to talk business.

Among the problems: Ireland's impending withdrawal from the British commonwealth; Italy's strength in the Mediterranean; Germany's colonial demands; trade.

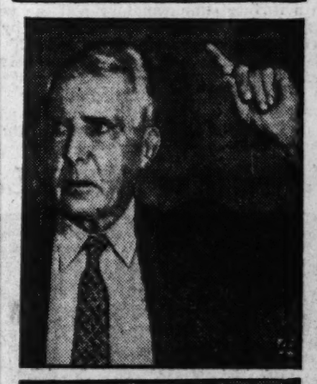

To England's prime minister, stubborn, high-minded Stanley Baldwin, these were problems mostly for other heads. Having steered the empire through a "constitutional crisis," the man who forced Edward's abdication was ready to retire.

Exile At The Radio

In a French chateau the man who might have been the coronation's star listened to London broadcasts with Mrs. Wallis Warfield — the Mrs. Simpson that was. They had become formally engaged the night before. The ring: platinum with a square-cut emerald. (There had been an emerald from Ernest Simpson, too.)

While London papers did not mention Edward on coronation day, he was still the government's problem child. Said a friend: the royal family wanted the marriage to be public; the government insisted it be private; the king asked that it be postponed until the argument was settled.

Unemployment Can Be Solved, Voters Say, Urging Short Week; U.S. Public Favors Reasonable Regulation of Labor Unions

Voters Approve Federal Control in New Field

Nation-Wide Institute Poll Measures Cross-Section of U. S. Opinion.

POLL 1—LABOR UNIONS

The United States Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers have begun a drive to have congress "balance" certain of labor's advantages under the Wagner act with new restraints. One of the conservatives' goals is government regulation of labor unions. Leaders of labor are bitterly opposed. The following article reveals how the voters themselves feel about the question in a nation-wide Institute poll.

By DR. GEORGE GALLUP,
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

NEW YORK, May 15.—The long arm of the United States government should reach into a new field today to regulate labor unions, voters declare by a majority of 7 to 3 in a nation-wide poll of the American Institute of Public Opinion.

"Do you think labor unions should be regulated by the government?" the Institute asked.

It is a question members of congress are asking very seriously today as labor celebrates a year of triumphs and new power.

"Yes," answer 69 per cent of the voters in today's national survey, "the unions should be regulated."

"No," say 31 per cent, "the unions should not be regulated."

The Institute distributed thousands of ballots to typical voters in every state. With no axe of its own to grind, the Institute's only concern has been to make its census as thoroughly representative as is scientifically possible.

Accordingly, ballots have been obtained from voters at all economic levels and in all important walks of life; from city and country people; from youths as well as from their elders; from labor and farmers and businessmen.

In two supplementary polls today the Institute finds even larger majorities in favor of (1) requiring labor unions to incorporate and (2) requiring mediation before a strike. The polls show that rank and file members of American labor itself are by no means unanimously opposed to incorporation, although the leaders of labor and their political allies are bitterly hostile to any curbing of labor's independence.

Today's poll will be bad news for labor leaders and others who fear regulation of the unions may be a step toward Fascism. Last winter, however, President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, predicted that the unrestricted use of the sit-down strike might result in a formidable demand for labor "regulation."

Intimates of John L. Lewis, CIO chairman, hinted that he, too, was worried about a reaction to the sit-down such as followed Great Britain's general strike of 1926, when parliament passed a vigorous labor disputes act.

Labor's Job—To Win Over Public Opinion

Congress is not likely to pass any law regulating the labor unions this year, nor to amend the present Wagner act in any way. Despite undertones of the public opinion reflected in today's poll, Washington holds with Senator Wagner that the labor act merely rectifies a balance that had previously tipped in favor of the employer.

But congress will eventually meet the regulation issue face to face unless labor succeeds in selling its case to the public.

Businessmen's conventions this year have been full of lamentation that business has not succeeded better in winning public support for its ideas. But it appears today that labor faces the same problem of wooing the public's confidence.

Today's poll will be good news for employer groups like the United States Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers. Both bodies have begun a drive to have congress offset the present Wagner labor act by new curbs on the unions. The poll will be good news, too, for Representative Clare E. Hoffman, the Michigan Republican, who has introduced a bill to require unions to register for federal licenses.

South Leads U. S. Demand For Union Regulation

The southern states, scene of CIO drives in oil and textile, lead the demand for government regulation of the unions in today's poll. In these 13 states, from Virginia to Texas, the vote is 77 per cent for regulation, 23 per cent opposed to regulation.

Do you think labor unions should be regulated by the government?

	YES	NO
New England States	64%	36%
Middle Atlantic States	68	32
East Central States	69	31
West Central States	69	31
Southern States	77	23
Rocky Mountain States	68	32
Pacific Coast States	69	31

Should labor unions be required to incorporate?

That is one of the most frequent suggestions for checking the independence of the unions. Employers claim that it would make the unions legally responsible for damages, that it would hold them to their contracts and make them less "reckless and lawless."

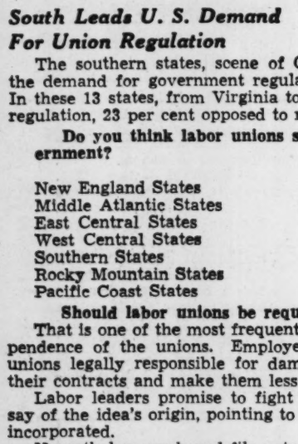

Labor leaders promise to fight it tooth and nail. "Fascist," they say of the idea's origin, pointing to Italy where unions have long been incorporated.

Nevertheless, rank and file voters in a supplementary poll indicate today that incorporation would be a good thing. Out of every 100 voters reached, 86 favor it, 14 oppose it.

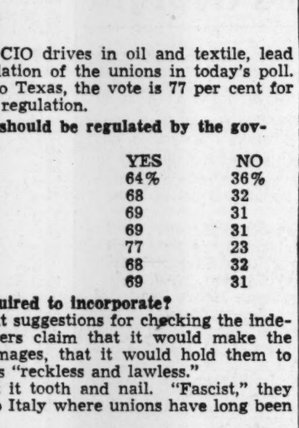

In a further supplementary poll the voters were asked: "Should employers and employes be compelled by law to try to settle their differences before strikes can be called?" This is the essence of the mediation arrangement now in force between the railroads and the railway unions. The plan requires that railway service must continue during the period of mediation.

Ballots from all parts of the country show 89 per cent in favor of such a system for industry in general, while 11 per cent oppose it.

AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF Public Opinion

Comments in Today's Poll On Unemployment Problem

Voters of Nation Express Their Opinions on Condition That Puzzles Statesmen.

THE QUESTION—Do you think the unemployment problem can be solved?

VOTERS ANSWER—Following are the opinions of representative voters answering this question for the American Institute of Public Opinion:

Pennsylvania Dentist: Samuel W. Silver, Philadelphia—"Yes. I don't believe unemployment can be solved by the WPA because that's only a temporary measure. It will be necessary first to know how many unemployed there are, exclusive of incurables and aged. It would be necessary to know in just what trades the unemployment lies, and then regulate those trades so that the men can be employed regularly."

Maine Housewife: Mrs. Pauline Conners, Portland—"Yes. It can be solved by giving jobs to naturalized citizens only, and by stopping all immigration. Also, a 40-hour week would absorb much unemployment. Tariff regulation, so that our own American products would have a chance, would speed up the demand for our goods and put more men to work."

Utah Teacher: P. S. Marthakis, Salt Lake City—"Yes. Reduce the number of hours a person is to work each day and let industry release the wheels of progress. More people will be employed only when industrialists learn to evaluate fair profits and when they become less capricious and more considerate of those who help them make their profits."

Kansas Farmer: T. L. Damron, Burlington—"No. It can't be solved until we have a different set-up than we have now. They've tried the New Deal for four years and there are just as many out of work now as when it started. If the supreme court had not kicked out the NRA we would not have had so much unemployment. The only way I see to do it is to reduce the hours of labor and pension the older people."

New Hampshire Housewife: Mrs. Carroll Hamilton, North Conway—"No. Due to the progress of industry in this machine age, machines have been invented and put into operation which cut down employers' pay rolls to a very marked degree. Also it is shown by government statistics that the population of the United States is steadily increasing, which means more employables."

Texas Merchant: Charles E. Stocks, El Paso—"Yes. Some two thousand years ago the Man of Galilee gave us this idea: 'Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them.' When employer and employe realize the time has come to utilize this practical and workable idea, they will find there is no problem of unemployment to be solved."

Would Public Approve Compromise?

While the senate judiciary committee prepares to take action, probably next week, on the President's supreme court plan, many congressmen favor a compromise by which the President would appoint two new justices instead of six.

Would such a compromise meet with the approval of public opinion?

The Institute of Public Opinion, having conducted a continuous poll on the President's court plan since February and having found the country about evenly divided, has now asked the voters:

"Would you favor a compromise on the President's court plan in which he would appoint two new judges instead of six?"

Citizens Favor Census Of Unemployed, 3 to 1

Say Government Should Establish Self-Registration System for Jobless.

POLL 3—JOB CENSUS

The administration has been urged to authorize a census of the unemployed, either by a door-to-door canvass or by establishment of central registration offices. In the following Institute poll the voters favor one proposal, oppose the other

By Institute of Public Opinion.

NEW YORK, May 15.—Whenever Americans start to discuss the dimensions of the United States unemployment problem they are baffled by a variety of figures on the number actually "unemployed."

The National Industrial Conference Board, for instance, places its estimate of the unemployed at 7,553,000 for March, but the American Federation of Labor has figures that are equally "good," but which disagree with the board's.

The United States Employment Service supplies the government with periodic estimates which are likely to disagree with both the others.

You can make your own estimate, but you will have to decide first of all what you mean by "unemployed."

Because of this uncertainty today, the voters believe that the government "should try to find out how many persons are unemployed by taking a national census."

Voting in a country-wide poll of the Institute of Public Opinion, representative Americans are approximately three to one in favor of making the count.

And, they indicate, the count should be conducted at local "registration offices" where the unemployed could present themselves, rather than by means of the familiar door-to-door census. In an earlier poll the voters found a door-to-door canvass too costly.

1930 Census.

The last official attempt to count United States unemployed was in 1930 when President Hoover's administration directed an unemployment count as part of the decennial census of the population. But Washington soon found data from this census inadequate, and the Roosevelt administration has been asked many times to authorize a full new check.

President Roosevelt has repeatedly answered requests of the sort with another: "Please define unemployment."

According to the President, the government already possesses adequate information about the needy unemployed through the records of the United States Employment Service. A complete door-to-door canvass, he believes, would be a waste of the $20,000,000 it is estimated to require.

Public Opinion.

The cost of the census, if conducted by the door-to-door method, makes a difference to the public, too, for in an earlier poll regarding an unemployment count last winter the Institute asked:

"Should the federal government appropriate $20,000,000 to make a national census of the unemployed?"

Throughout the country the Institute found a majority opposed to an unemployment census on these terms. If, however, the government could avoid the expense of a door-to-door checkup, the Institute pointed out, much of the opposition to a census would probably vanish.

Today the opposition is substantially less when it is proposed to have the unemployed "register themselves" at district bureaus like the postoffice.

Section by section the vote is:

U. S. Confident Jobless Can Be Employed Again

Shorter Hours of Labor Is Solution Preferred in Institute Poll.

POLL 2—UNEMPLOYMENT

Must the United States prepare for a permanent load of several million needy unemployed? Not according to the voters in the Institute of Public Opinion poll below. They advance several solutions.

By Institute of Public Opinion.

NEW YORK, May 15.—Can America solve unemployment, and, if so, how?

After six years of depression that double-pointed question is still a vital issue in every city and countryside throughout the United States.

Harry L. Hopkins, government relief administrator, finds that nearly 6,000,000 families are still depending on public relief money, and estimates that the United States is confronted with a permanent battalion of about 4,000,000 unemployed.

Economists, legislators and businessmen have pondered Hopkins' figures and made recommendations.

What do rank-and-file Americans think about unemployment? What solutions do they advance?

For the first time, thousands of representative voters have expressed their private opinions on these questions in a nation-wide poll of the American Institute of Public Opinion.

Confident.

The Institute poll reveals strong public confidence that unemployment can be solved. In spite of gloomy forecasts from many economists and chart-makers, 65 voters out of 100 in today's poll say that unemployment can be remedied.

In addition to saying that unemployment can be remedied, many voters submit their views of how this can be done.

Here are the 10 most prominent suggestions:

1. "Shorten the hours of labor in business and industry."—Almost one-half of those who offer opinions prefer this method. They argue that a substantial reduction in the national work week would spread the available employment among a wide number of the jobless.

President Roosevelt himself boosted this plan in a relief message a year ago.

2. "Less government in business"—This is the view that unemployment will eventually solve itself if business is allowed to go its own way.

Republicans frequently advanced this solution during the last presidential campaign, and the view finds substantial support in today's census. It matches Herbert Hoover's statement last year, that unemployment would remain uncured "until sound economic policies" were restored.

3. "Force reliefers into employment by slashing the WPA and other forms of relief."—Many voters are convinced that United States unemployment hangs near depression dimensions largely because reliefers have grown indifferent to job opportunities.

This view is anathema to organized United States labor, which fears that relief cuts may drive hungry reliefers into the labor market, to compete for labor's own jobs at starvation standards.

4. "Retire the worker at the age of 60."—This plan is put forward as an aid to young persons among the unemployed. Most of the voters urging it favor a pension system to care for the worker after 60.

5. "Prohibit married women from holding jobs in business and industry."—In an Institute poll last November an overwhelming majority approved a specific suggestion to the same effect.

6. "It's up to business."—Let the nation's employers co-operate in hiring men from relief rolls, whether they can afford to or not, say another group of voters.

7. "Levy a tax on new labor saving machinery to support the workers who are being displaced."

8. "Establish the unemployed on small, self-sustaining farmsteads."

9. "Stop further foreign immigration and send unemployed aliens back to their own nations."

10. "Eliminate child labor and give the child worker's job to an adult."

Townsend Plan.

Voters in today's poll give little attention to either the Townsend old age pension plan or to Upton Sinclair's plan to have the unemployed produce their own goods in idle factories, despite the fact that both programs have been specifically designed to cure unemployment.

A small minority advocate population planning by the widespread practice of birth control.

Miss Mildred Eaves Weds Frank Kelley At Church Ceremony

The marriage of Miss Mildred Eaves, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Burwell Eaves, to Frank Milton Kelley was solemnized yesterday at noon at Haygood Memorial Methodist church. The Rev. Marvin A. Franklin, of Birmingham, Ala., performed the ceremony.

The marriage vows were taken before an arrangement of palms and ferns interspersed with seven-branched candelabra holding white burning tapers. A tall floor basket of Easter lilies formed the central decoration.

Miss Caroline Hall, pianist, and Mrs. Charles E. Stokes, vocalist, presented the wedding music. The ushers were Melvin, Frank Jr., Wilbur and Sterling Eaves.

The bride's attendants were Misses Anne Conway and Betty Crosswell, junior bridesmaids, and little Miss Mary Kent, ring-bearer. The junior bridesmaids, who carried nosegays of sweetheart roses, wore ankle-length dresses of coral point d'esprit over matching taffeta foundations. Their hats were poke-bonnet leghorns trimmed with coral velvet ribbon which formed streamers falling to the bottom of their skirts. The ring-bearer's dress was peach point d'esprit fashioned the same as the junior bridesmaids and her hat was trimmed with peach velvet ribbon. The ring was carried on a tiny antique satin pillow which was used at the wedding of the bride's parents and at many other weddings.

The bride and groom entered together. The bride's dress was beige silk Alencon lace made along princess lines. It featured a high neckline finished with a tailored bow of talisman velvet ribbon. She wore a jacket of the same material made with modified leg-o'-mutton sleeves and a short peplum. The ankle length skirt and the jacket were edged with a tiny pleated ruffle. A narrow belt of talisman velvet ribbon was tied at the back in a small bow with streamers falling to the bottom of the skirt. She wore a braided halo of beige taffeta draped with a small matching veil. Her shower bouquet was of talisman roses.

Mrs. Frank B. Eaves, the bride's mother, wore a navy blue sheer with a matching pleated cape, a hat of natural baku, and a shoulder bouquet of gardenias.

As a going-away costume, the bride wore a tailored suit of green Palm Beach cloth with luggage tan accessories. Mr. Kelley and his bride left immediately on a wedding trip to Jacksonville, Miami Beach, and other points of interest in Florida.

Out-of-town guests attending the wedding were the Rev. and Mrs. Marvin A. Franklin, Birmingham, Ala.; Mrs. Thomas A. Cox and Mrs. Charles E. Stokes, Charleston, S. C.; Mr. and Mrs. Joel F. Pruett, Macon, Ga., and Mrs. B. B. Rich, Jacksonville, Fla.

Mutual Hobby Leads to Romance Resulting in Late June Nuptials

By Sally Forth.

RALPH MORRISSEY, if you remember, had a quaint little bookshop across Peachtree street from St. Luke's church, a short time ago. He dealt, you know, in first editions, priceless volumes, and such things. Collecting rare old books is a sort of hobby with him. Hence the shop.

One day Frances Brown strolled into the shop. First editions are a sort of mania with her, too, it seems. So she was on an explorative expedition, more or less, just to see what she could find.

And even though she did not find a treasured old volume, that casual visit was the beginning of a thrilling romance. For today her engagement is announced to Mr. Morrissey, their marriage to be among the socially important events of late June.

Frances will return to her mother's native heath for residence as a bride, for Ralph is now in business with his father, Andrew Morrissey, in Nashville, Tenn. Mrs. Brown, you remember, as Miss Amanda Cheatham Pearce, was a belle and social favorite of Nashville society.

Frances' marriage will doubtless bring to the city her sister, Mrs. Thomas Blake, who resides in New York and of whom Atlanta society has seen far too little in recent years. As Maria Brown, Mrs. Blake was a gracious adornment to social circles here, and her visits are always anticipated with much pleasure by her contemporaries.

WHEN lovely Anne Jeter becomes the bride of Marion Rivers at a June ceremony, she will wear a tiara of pearls in her wedding veil that has an interesting history and unusual significance in the family of the groom-elect. The tiara was first worn by Marion's great-great-grandmother Izard, of Charleston, S. C., at her wedding. It was also worn by his great-grandmother Izard; his grandmother, Julia Davis Izard, and his mother, Mrs. Marion Rivers, at their weddings.

Mrs. Rivers, who is the former Ruhy Williams, of Savananh, was presented to society in Savannah, at the St. Cecilia ball in Charleston, and at the state ball in Columbia. On each of these important occasions in her life she also wore the tiara and it is particularly fitting that she wants her future daughter, to whom she is genuinely devoted, to wear the historic ornament on her eventful wedding day. Mrs. Rivers' sister, Edith Williams Tiller, of Moultrie, also wore the pearls at her debut and at her wedding.

The engagement of Anne and Marion has been an open secret among their friends, for since the two met a little over three years ago they have seldom been seen one without the other. They are two of the best-liked members of the younger contingent and Sally joins their countless friends today in wishing them every good fortune that life can hold.

A BEAUTIFUL young blonde has had her sparkling square-cut diamond ring for two months, and no one suspects that she is engaged. Sally has seen her the center of admiring masculine groups on the dance floor all spring, but instead of wearing her lovely ring, it is kept in the coat pocket of her fiance. Whenever the pretty sub-deb has a date with her fiance, he brings forth the ring, and when goodbyes are said, he takes it back again. The reason for this unusual procedure is that the girl says she cannot resist wearing it when it is in her keeping.

The reason their engagement is being kept a secret is that the lovely young girl has not yet graduated from high school. She is a senior, and does not want the news to be told before graduation day.

Here are a few clues to the mystery: She has golden blonde hair, blue eyes, peach-and-cream complexion, and is really lovely to look at. She is one of the most popular members of the young social set, and has a younger sister. He is as dark as his fiancee is blond, and attended Tech, where he was well known in fraternal and campus groups. He is now a successful young businessman, and both he and the young girl he will wed in the fall are members of well-known families. Announcement of their betrothal will be made a few days after she graduates from school.

AMONG interesting figures in social and literary circles are Dr. and Mrs. William Oliver Stevens, who have been residing here for some time and who have made a wide circle of friends, both by their charming personalities and through their relationship to Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Sharp. Mrs. Stevens and Mr. Sharp are cousins, the former being before her marriage Miss Claudia Miles, a belle and beauty of Norfolk, and a representative of a distinguished family long prominent in navy circles.

It is recalled with interest that her brother, now Commander Alfred Miles, when as a midshipman was leader of the choir at the Naval Academy and set the title and wrote the words to "Anchors Aweigh," that stirring and classic song of the navy which has become one of the national airs.

Dr. Stevens is an author of many books, as well as textbooks which are used at the academy, and where he was professor of English and history for 21 years. Two of his most popular books were "Nantucket, Faraway Island," and "The Correct Thing," and his latest, "Annapolis Anne Arundel's Town," just off the press, will hold particular interest for those who associate the city with the academy. Dr. Stevens born in Burma, S. A., the son of missionaries, is now dean of the school of literature and jouranlism at Oglethorpe University. His son, Hugo, is also a member of the faculty, while another son will be graduated this year from Yale.

GLIMPSED at the flower show: Susie Hatcher Boykin, of Columbus, mingling with her many Atlanta contemporaries. . . . Mrs. Thomas Hinman and Mrs. Robert Davis admiring Mrs. Hinman's arrangement which won first prize in the small pitcher class. . . . Mrs. Charles Patterson, wife of the popular army colonel, rivaling the exhibits in beauty, wearing a flower print and a red picture hat. . . . Kate Schweppe and Jessie Pottinger, those charming sisters, greeting friends. . . . Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Bardwell enjoying the exhibits. . . . Another popular couple, the Everett Struppers, admiring the flower carts. . . . Mrs. Jesse Fort, former Atlantan, being welcomed by friends. . . . Maryo Middleton Gilbert looking stunning in an aquamarine sport frock with a white halo around her hair.

ATLANTA friends of Mr. and Mrs. Troup Howard are according them a royal welcome since their arrival here last week for a visit to relatives. Mr. and Mrs. Howard have resided in Liverpool, England, since shortly after their marriage, and this is their first visit to the states in nine years.

They were accompanied by their young son and daughter, Troup Jr., who is 14, and Gloria, who is 12. In fact, the primary object of the visit here is to place the children in camp for the summer, and later to enroll them in school for the fall term.

Mrs. Howard is the former Olive Keller, of Atlanta, and her visits "back home" are always anticipated by a host of friends. Mr. Howard is the son of Mrs. Troup Howard Sr., and the late Mr. Howard, who were numbered among the state's most prominent citizens during their residence here.

Miss Wilson To Wed Hardin Craig Jr.

Of cordial interest is the announcement made by Mr. and Mrs. Emerson Greer Wilson, of Decatur, of the engagement of their daughter, Miss Raemond Bingham Wilson, to Hardin Craig Jr., of Stanford University, California, the date of the marriage to be announced later.

Miss Wilson is the only child of Mr. Wilson, secretary of the National Council of Y. M. C. A., and Mrs. Wilson, who before her marriage was Miss Estelle Bingham, of Tuscaloosa, Ala. Miss Wilson was graduated from Agnes Scott College in 1930 and received the degree of master of arts in English from the University of North Carolina in 1932. She taught English for two years at Agnes Scott and for the past two and a half years has been on the editorial staff of the University of North Carolina Press.

Mr. Craig is the only child of Dr. Hardin Craig, professor of English at Stanford University, and Mrs. Craig, who before her marriage was Miss Gertrude Carr, of Ashby, Mass. He was graduated from Princeton University in 1929 and the following year attended the American School of Archaeology in Athens. He was for two years a member of the department of history at Hobart College, Geneva, N. Y., and has recently completed the requirements for the degree of doctor of philosophy in history which he will receive in June from Harvard University.

Miss Merry and Robert Jones III Wed at Brilliant Church Rites

MR. AND MRS. ROBERT HARRISON JONES.

Miss Virginia Merry, daughter of Mrs. R. G. Merry, became the bride of Robert H. Jones III at a brilliant ceremony taking place yesterday at the First Presbyterian church. Rev. William Gardner, pastor of the church, performed the ceremony at 12:30 o'clock in the presence of a large gathering of relatives and friends of the young couple.

The handsome interior of the church was beautifully decorated with rich greenery which banked the altar amid which was placed tall wicker baskets filled with white calla lilies. In the center of the foliage and on either side were seven-branched cathedral candelabra holding white burning tajers. Pews reserved for members of the two families were marked by clusters of lilies tied with white satin ribbons.

Prior to and during the ceremony a program of nuptial music was rendered on the organ by Dr. Charles Sheldon.

Wedding Party.

The ushers were former Governor John M. Slaton, Dr. Charles Andrews, of Canton; James Duncan, Rufus Darby, Edward G. Hitt, John M. Slaton Jr. and the groomsmen were Slaton Jones, brother of the groom, and Frank Davie.

Mrs. Rufus Darby was the matron of honor and the bridesmaids were Mrs. John Merry and Miss Bertha Nix, formerly of Albany, and cousin of the bride. They were all gowned alike in beautiful models of lemon yellow mousseline de soie posed over yellow satin and made along becoming old-fashioned lines. The low square neckline was offset by short puff sleeves and the long full skirts were floor length. They wore large picture hats of leghorn trimmed in green and carried arm bouquets of mixed garden flowers tied with green satin ribbons which formed an effective color combination of pastel shades.

Beautiful Bride.

Entering with her brother, John Merry, by whom she was given in marriage, the bride was met at the altar by the groom and his brother, Waldo Jones, who was best man. Her brunet beauty was further enhanced by her wedding gown of ivory satin which belongs to Mrs. Rufus Darby and worn by her, when as Miss Judy Beers she became the bride of Mr. Darby in April, 1936. It is fashioned along effective and becoming princess lines with long sleeves, puffed at the shoulder and extending to a point over her hand. The square neckline was featured by a Queen Ann collar and the bride wore a beautiful seed pearl necklace loaned her by Mrs. Edward G. Hitt, cousin of the groom. She wore a coronet of orange blossoms in the becoming halo effect with clusters of blossoms on each side. The long misty tulle veil fell in graceful folds over the long train which was built into the dress. The bride carried calla and valley lilies.

Mrs. Merry, mother of the bride, was beautifully gowned in a model of black marquisette trimmed in white bow knots creating a lovely effect. Her hat was black and she wore a corsage of gardenias. Mrs. Robert H. Jones Jr., mother of the groom, was a handsome figure in her model of hyacinth blue with crepe skirt and an embroidered organdy top. She wore a large blue hat and her accessories matched. Her flowers were pink roses.

After the ceremony Mrs. Merry entertained at a breakfast at her home on Woodcrest avenue for her daughter and Mr. Jones, the guests being limited to members of the wedding party, families and out-of-town guests. The table in the dining room was covered with an exquisite imported lace cloth and was centered by an embossed wedding cake. On either side were silver candlesticks holding burning tapers. Miss Margaret McCarty kept the bride's book and assisting the hostess in entertaining were Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Peter Nix, formerly of Albany.

Out-of-Town Guests.

Mr. Jones and his bride left for a wedding trip and upon their return will reside with the groom's parents on Peachtree circle. The bride traveled in gray sheer wool threaded in silk. Completing the ensemble was a navy jacket, hat and accessories.

Out-of-town guests present were Mrs. David Dean Thompkins, of Sylva, N. C.; Rowland Murray, of Charlotte, N. C.; Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Briscoe Merry, Gardner Weigle, Leonard Weigle, Miss Kate Louise Weigle, Gardner Weigle Jr.; Miss Annie B. IT'S OUR JOB TO KEEP THEM Looking Swell!

White and light color summer suits have grown tremendously in popularity. Not only are they especially suited to this climate, but also a real joy and comfort to wearers throughout the long summer months.

Nothing is more beautiful than . . . white suit—white hat—white shoes . . . if immaculately clean and freshly pressed. But so repugnant to one's sense of refinement if otherwise.

At first, men were not kindly disposed toward suits that required frequent cleaning. Because of the cost, plus the lack of proper facilities for handling.

But that has all been corrected—by the Gold Shield special process. Which not only cleans and sterilizes, but retains the original size and shape, if material and make are at all up to standard.

All Gold Shield plants have special machines designed solely for pressing light summer suits. Instead of flattening the shoulders and fronts of coats, this new type presser virtually moulds the garment to the wearer's figure.

Don't make the mistake of experimenting. Choose a cleaner who you know has proper facilities for the kind of finishing which is essential to correct grooming.

Cleaned and pressed as Gold Shield members are so well equipped to do them, you can indulge to the fullest this summer—freely, safely, economically—knowing it is our job to keep them Looking Swell!

Phone one of these Gold Shield cleaners to call for your last summer's suits. You'll be needing them shortly.

Not content to "rest on their laurels," the ninth district of Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs which won the award last year for federating the most per capita clubs, continues the good work through the first vice president, Mrs. W. G. Wingate, of Ellijay. With Mrs. J. B. Parham, of Canton, as traveling companion, Mrs. Wingate has made the third of a series of tours through the district in the interest of bringing more clubs into the federafold, and reaching one of the goals set by the district project committee. Objectives were Cumming and Dawsonville as strategic centers for federated clubs. Winder was in line, so Mrs. Wingate and Mrs. Parham attended the April club meeting and conferred with Mrs. A. D. McCurry, past district president. The night was spent with the district president, Mrs. C. E. Pittman, in Commerce. At Toccoa next day they were joined by Mrs. Richard Addison, president of Toccoa Woman's Club, and made a pilgrimage to Tallulan Falls school. Here they had luneh with Mrs. Z. I. The last stop was Gainesville where the club institute was enjoyed.

Upon request of the Woman's Club and the P.-T. A. Mayor W. M. Whitehurst and the city council of Jeffersonville ordered that May 12 and 13 be known as "Clean-Up Days for Jeffersonville." Possibilities of Penny Art Fund Are Discussed by Mrs. Wallace

By MRS. ROY W. WALLACE, State Chairman.

Out of 70 clubs in Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs that contributed to the penny art fund in 1937, only 10 reported their art activities. I am wondering if the clubs understand that these reports are necessary to compete for prizes. Please remember that you only report the work your club has accomplished in "Depictive Art," not in fine arts. At the beginning of the year appoint a penny art chairman and insist that a record be kept of all club endeavors to raise the standard of American art. Send this report, with your pennies, to your district chairman or to me. To be eligible for prizes, these must be in my hands not later than March 1, 1938. At the close of this administration, April, 1938, we will have an additional prize to the one bought with the club pennies, known as the "Wingate award." This prize offered by Mrs. W. G. Wingate at Ellijay will be given the club sending in the second best report.

Some of the points to be considered in awarding the prizes are: 1. Form art study groups. Write essays on art; learn to know American artists and sculptors, past and present. Put on art lectures, report number of visits to galleries and private studios. 2. Put on exhibitions in clubhouses, public libraries, community houses, make them social events, serve refreshments, if practical. 3. Any original art program will be given credit. 4. Especial credit will be given to clubs reporting number of works of art purchased by members. If a club member buys a work of art for a gift, or for herself, it should be counted in on your club's activities. 5. Send in pennies and full report of art activities to state chairman by March 1, 1938.

By request, and to aid clubs in planning their penny art programs, I am giving excerpts of the Marietta Woman's Club report for 1937, which won the prize at the Macon convention. This report was submitted by Mrs. John H. Boston, president of the Marietta Club.

"In art is found the revelation of the spirit of man, his deepest feelings, his highest aspirations."

Never has applied arts been so successfully brought to the fore in the Marietta Woman's Club as at the present time. One can scarcely realize the enormity of the exhibit conducted by one of our club members, unless one was a fortunate spectator. The city auditorium which has been used for theatrical productions and commencements was used for the exhibition, the walls being entirely covered by pictures.

The frieze around the auditorium was done in different kinds of crayons, depicting the important dates in the history of the United States. This was in bas-relief and the scenic effect, with the lights, was beautiful. There were, besides this, 1,000 pictures and drawings, etchings, etc., piece of furniture made from pasteboard, plaques, plates, crockery made from paper.

There have been as many as 30 or 40 visits to studios and art galleries, valuable pictures purchased by club members and those retained by club members who are noted artists are about 20, besides several hundred flower prints. Pilgrimages were made to the studio of Charles Naegle, one of the nation's greatest artists. Entire programs have been devoted to lectures on applied arts, and Miss Martha Gramling, a club member, has exhibited 35 flower prints and 10 oil paintings in the clubhouse. She has had two exhibits in Atlanta recently and one in Memphis.

Club has had lecture son bookbinding, weaving crafts, original poems and talks on art by club members. We have stressed the home, interior decorating, the making of posters, sewing and all the applied groups, including architecture and art study. Musical appreciation has been taught by means of drawings and in every line of this work interest is vital.

Mrs. Otis Abercrombie, president, presided. Reports were made by the standing committees for the year. A scrapbook was presented by Mrs. Abercrombie to Miss Helen Mitchell for her faithfulness in helping with the club library.

The president appointed for another year the following chairmen: Mrs. F. L. Chatfield, chairman of program committee; Mrs. T. A. Barker, chairman of music committee; Mrs. Daisy Holloway, chairman of student aid; Mrs. A. D. Williams and Mrs. Emmie Williams, membership committee; Mrs. K. D. The election was at the May meeting at which the retiring president, Mrs. Phil Ringel, presided, and gave her annual report. All club dues were paid to the district treasurer before the convention in October. To Tallulah Falls School, $15; to student aid fund, $5. On the honor roll of Ella F. White Foundation, seven new members added this year, and co-operation given a junior group in starting a nursery and planting a park near the city hospital. Had an open forum to discuss crime and its prevention, led by Judge Gordon Knox, of the eighth district.

The district projects are education, citizenship and junior clubs, and Brunswick Club had school children put on the February program, which was later broadcast from Savannah radio station. The opening meeting in the autumn was held at the board of trade rooms, and the president told what the board of trade is doing for Brunswick and how the club women can assist. The American home department featured an illustrated lecture on interior decorating. Practically every member belongs to a garden club affiliated with the Garden Club of Georgia. There were local and state pilgrimages to gardens, and 1,100 oleanders were rooted for distribution.

Every club member who has children belongs to the P.-T. A. and helps to carry out the educational program. One member is on the board of education. The county maintains an opportunity school for adult training, which was started by the Woman's Club. Club is closely associated with the public library, and there is a circulating library among members of the division of literature. Music is featured at most meetings, and an art exhibit was displayed for a week. "The Unknown Soldier" was enacted on Armistice day. Cooperation has been given toward control of cancer and venereal diseases, and the National Youth Movement has been fostered by the chairman of public welfare who is secretary of the Y. W. C. A.

W.C.T.U. Editor Tells of Meetings Held by State Prohibition Forces

By M. Frances Meadors Burghard, of Macon, State W. C. T. U. Editor.

News reaching my desk the past week is different so this column will be different, as a general thing news concerns the activities in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union but this time it is about what was done and said at meetings of the Consolidated Forces for Prohibition in Georgia, of which the W. C. T. U. is a part, in opposition to the measure to legalize hard liquors June 8.

I have attended three such meetings in Macon—encouraging meetings in which leading ministers, merchants, professional men, industrialists, those not so prominent but equally as earnest; and church, missionary, church school women as well as W. C. T. U. members participated.

Besides electing an executive committee, finance committee, publicity or educational committee, heads for each district in the county who will secure precinct leaders, etc., it was unanimously voted to observe June 4 as a day of fasting and prayer.

The April issue of the Georgia W. C. T. U. Bulletin was a prohibition campaign number, indeed the demand for more copies then was so great that thousands of the first and second sheets have been printed as a prohibition campaign leaflet, and while thousands have been distributed over the entire state, others may be secured from the publishers, Lyon, Harris & Brooks, of Macon, at $2.50 per thousand. This firm has published the state official organ, the Georgia W. C. T. U. Bulletin, for many years.

This leaflet clarifies the confusing form of the ballot, an enlightening analyzation of the liquor bill, a discussion "of liquor for revenue," of the moral, health, crime phases by Mrs. Mary S. Russell, state W. C. T. U. president, and other pertinent dry facts.

The statements which follow were heard or reported at prohibition meetings recently.

"The Governor stated in an address to the legislature that there were three ways open to them to raise the additional $2,000,000 revenue to carry out his program. Revenue from liquor was one. The legislature chose this one but the Governor knows there are two other ways. He did not urge this one.

"For every dollar of whisky revenue received, we have lost $20 in the loss of legitimate trade and the cost of damage done to society," declared Roger Babson, the famous statistician and economist.

"The cost of drunken driving during 1935 was nearly one hundred million more than the amount received in federal liquor revenues, according to the American Business Men's Research Foundation.

"The last three years constitute the most terrible period of crime history in the life of America, and the modern youth is drifting deeper and deeper into crime, said J. Edgar Hoover, head G-man.

Miss Jessie F. Binford, director of Juvenile Protective Association of Chicago, says "Of the 1,176 taverns visited, 1,105 weret found to be violating one or more of the state or city control laws and ordinances.

One who reads the Scriptures which are able to make us wise, quoted: "In the revenues of the wicked is trouble," Prov. 15:6. "Better is a little with righteousness than great revenue without right." Prov. 16:8. "They shall be ashamed of your revenues because of the fierce anger of the Lord." Jer. 12:13. "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink; that puttest thy bottle to him and maketh him drunken also." Habakkuk 2:15.

"No, we are not working for liquor control. We are working for its annihilation, to outlaw it. We do not try to control a rattlesnake, we try to kill it," declared one dry advocate to hearty applause.

Laws against the liquor traffic are an investment in the economic interest of the people. "It must be irksome to the real businessman of America to see the people robbed of $8,000,000,000 for liquor that should have been spent for food, clothing and the necessities." It was money worse than lost.

The W. C. T. U. is much encouraged over the prospects for preventing the repeal of its prohibition law, and are using its well-established methods—agitate, educate, organize.

Miss Brown's Engagement Announced to Mr. Morrissey

No announcement of the season inspires more cordial interest nor carries more social importance than that made today by Mr. and Mrs. A. Ten Eyck Brown, of the engagement of their daughter, Miss Frances Brown, to Ralph Morrissey, of Nashville, Tenn., the marriage to unite two of the south's most prominent families.

Miss Brown is the elder daughter of her parents, her only sister being Mrs. Thomas Blake, of New York, whom Atlanta society remembers as the former Miss Maria Brown. Her father is one of the state's best known architects and a leader in professional, civic and social circles. Her mother was before her marriage Miss Amanda Cheatham Pearce, a belle and beauty of Nashville, Tenn.

The bride-elect inherits her father's aesthetic tendencies, being a talented artist. A member of the Junior League, she has been invaluable to the organization in the production of stage settings and scenic paintings for the league marionettes and other theatricals given by the league. She received her education at St. Mary's in Peekskill, N. Y., and after finishing school enjoyed the cultural advantages of wide travel in this country and in Europe.

Miss Brown was formally presented to Atlanta society by her parents and since that time has been a popular and admired member of exclusive circles not only here but in other cities where she has visited. Of the brunet type of beauty, she possesses unusual charm and a vivacity which combine with her brilliant mental attainments to make her a sought-after figure.

Mr. Morrissey is the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Morrissey, outstanding citizens of Nashville, Tenn. He is a graduate of Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Va., where he was a member of the Kappa Sigma fraternity. Later he took his M. A. degree at Vanderbilt University at Nashville, where he is now associated with his father in the manufacture of reproductions of antique furniture. Mr. Morrissey is the nephew of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Morrison, of Atlanta, and Gervis and Frank Morrison Jr. are his cousins.

He and his bride will form attractive and welcome additions to the married contingent of society in the Tennessee capital.

Flowerland Forms Lovely Setting For Carlton-Craig Marriage Rites

Flowerland, the handsome suburban home of Dr. and Mrs. Luther C. Fischer, at Chamblee, formed the setting for the wedding ceremony at which their niece, Miss Catherine Carlton, daughter of Mrs. James E. Carlton, became the bride of Albert P. Craig Jr., of New York, yesterday afternoon at 5:30 o'clock. The Rev. Dr. Ashby Jones read the marriage service which assembled a throng of interested friends and relatives.

The ceremony took place in the drawing room of the home overlooking the magnificent rose garden now in full bloom which is a distinctive feature of Flowerland. An altar was formed before the fireplace of palms and tropical ferns interspersed with clusters of madonna lilies and tall standards topped with candelabra holding lighted tapers. Groups of palms were massed at either end of the mantel which was centered with a mound of valley lilies and graced with candelabra holding cathedral tapers. The decorations throughout the lower floor featured a color motif of white and green, with quantities of white roses, snapdragons, sweetpeas and lilies attractively arranged on tables and consoles.

A musical program was rendered during the assembling of the wedding gues... by George L. Hamrick, organist, Mrs. Mary Griffith Dobbs, harpist, and a cellist.

Wedding Personnel.

Miss Emily Carlton, of Chicago, was her sister's maid of honor, and the bridesmaids included the bride's cousin, Miss Mary Hurt; her niece, Miss Carolyn Evins, of Chicago, Miss Murdoch Walker, and Mrs. Joe Marbury, of Miami, Fla. Their charming costumes expressed the striking color note of peach and turquoise blue. Miss Carlton wore an empire gown of peach colored mousseline de soie posed over peach taffeta and featuring a heart-shaped neckline outlined with a narrow box-pleated frill, the frill being repeated on the puffed sleeves. Bands of velvet in a slightly deeper shade of peach formed a quaint bustle at the back of the gown and extended to form a slight train. A twist of velvet in the same shade was combined with maline to form a Juliet cap which was finished with a brief maline veil. Miss Carlton carried an old-fashioned bouquet of turquoise blue delphinium, peach colored gladioli and sweet peas.

The bridesmaids wore similarly fashioned gowns of turquoise blue mousseline over taffeta and similarly styled headdresses. Their flowers were old-fashioned bouquets of delphinium, sweet peas, and gladioli in tones of peach and turquoise.

Miss Margaret Evins, of Chicago, small niece of the bride, acted as flower girl, wearing a quaint frock of peach taffeta fashioned like those worn by the other attendants, her hair caught with a small bow knot of peach ribbon. She carried a nosegay of small flowers in tones of peach and turquoise blue.

The lovely young bride was given in marriage by her uncle, Dr. Fischer, and they were met at the altar by the bridegroom and his best man, Christian Todd, of New York. She chose for the ceremony a period gown of lustrous white duchess satin. A flounce of exquisite point applique lace outlined the neckline, falling gracefully over the shoulders, and adorned the skirt just above the hemline. The lace was caught at intervals with tiny clusters of orange blossoms. A double veil of illusion tulle fell from a coronet of orange blossoms and extended to cover the long satin train. The bride carried a bouquet of white spray orchids, bouvardia and valley lilies.

Informal Reception.

Following the marriage service Dr. and Mrs. Fischer entertained at a reception, the bridal couple, the wedding attendants, and the bride's mother, Mrs. James E. Carlton, receiving the guests with them. Mrs. Fischer was handsomely gowned in softest rose marquisette inset with lace medallions, and her flowers were a shoulder cluster of lavender orchids. Mrs. Carlton's costume was fashioned of Eleanor blue marquisette and lace and offset with a spray of pale pink orchids. Mrs. H. B. Evins, of Chicago, the bride's sister, wore hyacinth blue marquisette featuring short, puffed sleeves and a full swirling skirt. Her flowers were pink camellias.

The beautifully appointed table in the dining room was covered with an imported lace cloth and centered with a huge silver bowl filled with valley lilies, white roses, sweet peas, and bouvardia, garlands of smilax trailing from the centerpiece over the edge of the table. White tapers burning in silver holders completed the lovely decorations. The buffet was graced with a handsome tiered wedding cake, elaborately embossed in bridal design.

Misses Bright Bickerstaff, Frances Hurt, Russell Stovall and Sara Sims served punch. Miss Margaret Stovall kept the bride's book. Assisting in entertaining were Mesdames Ernest Woodruff, George Walters, John S. Hurt and John T. Hall, of Daytona Beach, Fla. Mrs. James J. Goodrum poured coffee.

The bridal couple left for a wedding journey, and upon their return they will take possession of their recently completed home in Richwood, N. J. Mrs. Craig traveled in a smart costume consisting of a beige crepe dress and cape, worn with black accessories and a black hat trimmed in biege.

Following the system devised by Joseph for the salvation of ancient Egypt, government authorities in China have established granaries where a percentage of bumper crops is stored against the threat of famine in lean years.

Her playing possesses a delicate exquisiteness that lends itself particularly well to drawing room performance.

Melody Way Pupils.

Rosa Hamm Combs presented her pupils in the Melody Way class piano in a sectional concert Thursday night in the auditorium of Samuel Inman school, with pupils from her classes at Morningside, Samuel Inman, Moreland, Highland and Peeples Street schools playing a program to a large audience. It was remarkable what these youngsters accomplished in the class groups and their poise in their first public performance was exceptional. Pupils from Morningside school were Jane Kendrick, Manville Mayfield, Betty Kendrick and Jimmie Hammond; from Peeples Street, Julian Pierson, Jimmy Haygood, Margaret Griffith, Betty Stephens, and Betty Frink; from Highland school, Jocelyn Johnson, Shirley Hastings, Claude Pritchard, Myrtle McNew, Johnnie Lee Carpenter and Charles Wike; from Samuel Inman, Claire Cowan, Betty Baker, Micah Quillian, Carol Evans, Joyce Crosland, Billie Walters, Carolyn Morse, Betty Jane Hancock, Alice Gorman, Carolyn Anderson, W. A. Waldrop and Joan Glerum; from Moreland, Mary Gene Cothran, Eleana Shelden, Dick Burks, David Smith, Betty Morgan, Rai Wallace, Donald Anderson, Dorothy Warren, Jo Louise Moore and Dorothy Burt.

Final Program of Juniors.

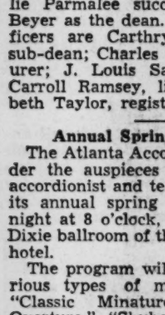

The junior division of the Atlanta Music Club, Margaret Fraser, counsellor, gave its final program of the season last Saturday afternoon at the Studio Arts building. A feature of the program was an Irish harp ensemble, comprised of six little girls, Beverly Dobbs, Winifred Shackleford, Florence Crook, Sara Jacobs, Ida Pennington and Helen Sewell. Another feature was a violin ensemble formed by Pauline Grant, Jane de Silva and Claire Kemper, with Jean da Silva at the piano. Others appearing on the program were Marjorie Stukes, Margaret Duckworth, June Halliburton, Nicke Chaknis, Anne Coggins, Billy Greene, Helen Carnathat, Patsy Ley, Jane Steinborg, Betty Clarke, Pearl Burns, Alla Mae Walker, Sheila Barskin, Yvonne Sanberg, Josephine Winter and Hermann Allison.

Cain Impatiently Awaits To See Native Shore From Homing Vessel

Twenty-One Days at Sea Reward Atlantan With Sight of America, Landing and Trek to New York En Route to Native City.

By ARTHUR CAIN.

Cain was never happier than when he set sail across the blue Pacific bound for the sunny shores of California. With two years of penniless travel behind us, two years in which we had almost constantly anticipated our return home we were overjoyed to realize that it would now be only a matter of days before the native land would be visible upon the horizon. Cain performed his chores aboard his newly found ship, with an abandon which astonished his less enthusiastic shipmates.

Arthur Cain.

The crossing of the Pacific was uneventful. For 21 days not a ship was sighted nor land of any sort, and not a wave rippled the sea. Cain began to scan the horizon at least a week before the Golden Gate of San Francisco would come within view. Speaking of impatience! Then, on the 21st day, through a dense fog we got our first glimpse of America for what seemed many years. Cain offered a prayer of thanks to all the saints available.

Stranger Bolts.

"Hello there, my fine fellow—my brave young American," screamed Cain, embracing the first citizen of San Francisco that he came across, "how in the world are you?" This perfect stranger bolted away as if he had seen one of the Brooklyn Boys. Cain gurgled happily and proceeded to annoy the populace just for the hell of it. It was grand to be back!

And after a few days in 'Frisco and Los Angeles we made another ship, our last one for a long time, which would take us through the Canal and deposit the Cain frame upon the festered streets of New York city. There, while Cain loathed the place, we would be even nearer Atlanta and it would be only a matter of a pleasant little hike before Cain could sink the weary bones upon the downy crib which has been his bunk for lo these many years. Again Cain caroled girlishly as he flitted lightly through the rigging. Flute-like strains of The Bell Song were clearly audible throughout the day.

Visits Old Friends.

We had planned to stay in New York no longer than necessary to attend to what we laughingly refer to as the Cain business and then beat a path straightway for home. We would speak to a few friends, purchase garments which would modify the garishness of the gorgeous raiment which had covered the body since leaving Shanghai, and then head due south for Georgia. In New York we strolled over to the Bowery to see if we couldn't do something for our erstwhile friends who were probably still down and out. A couple of bucks distributed among the lot of them would seem like a small fortune.

I was greeted uproariously. "Vandy," which for some moot reason had always been by nickname on the Bowery, was received with an enthusiasm which did the Cain heart good. I made up my mind that I would spend my last nickel on the lads if they wished. They hadn't the slightest idea that I had a bit of money.

"Want a drink?" asked we with a benevolent beam in either eye.

"Sure we want a drink. Who don't? But we'll give you one, Vandy, old boy, come on up to the place!"

Events March.

Cain goggled, thinking he had not heard aright. Place? Place? When we knew the boys, the only place they had was one of the doorways along the Bowery. We permitted ourself to be led up a dingy flight of stairs and into an empty store house. "The Place" was certainly the crummiest abode I have ever seen and that's saying plenty. Three other of the lads were already there, sleeping peacefully amidst sawdust, filth and corruption.

"Say when," smirked the host, holding up a grayish looking glass. Cain looked about to see just what we were supposed to be drinking. We paled visibly.

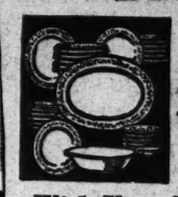

The chappie had filled the glass with water and was putting the tube of the gas jet into it. He turned on the gas, waited until the water bubbled and passed the cocktail over to me. Cain raised his hands in holy horror and dashed down the steps like the wind. Lemme outa here quick!

So Cain survived the evils of that particular district and it's a good thing—for if we had gone into the spirit-of-the-thing there we would probably be there yet.

Officials of the border patrol say 800,000 Mexican aliens crossed the border during the depression in a "back to Mexico" movement.

GRAVURE PICTORIAL SECTION

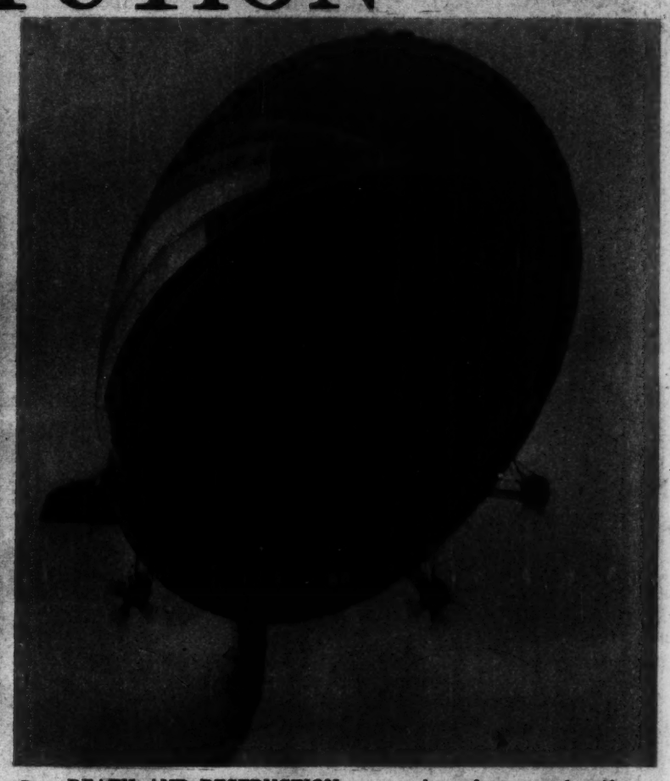

THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION

SUNDAY, MAY 16, 1937.

For the First Time in History a Major Catastrophe Takes Place Before the Camera's Recording Eye.

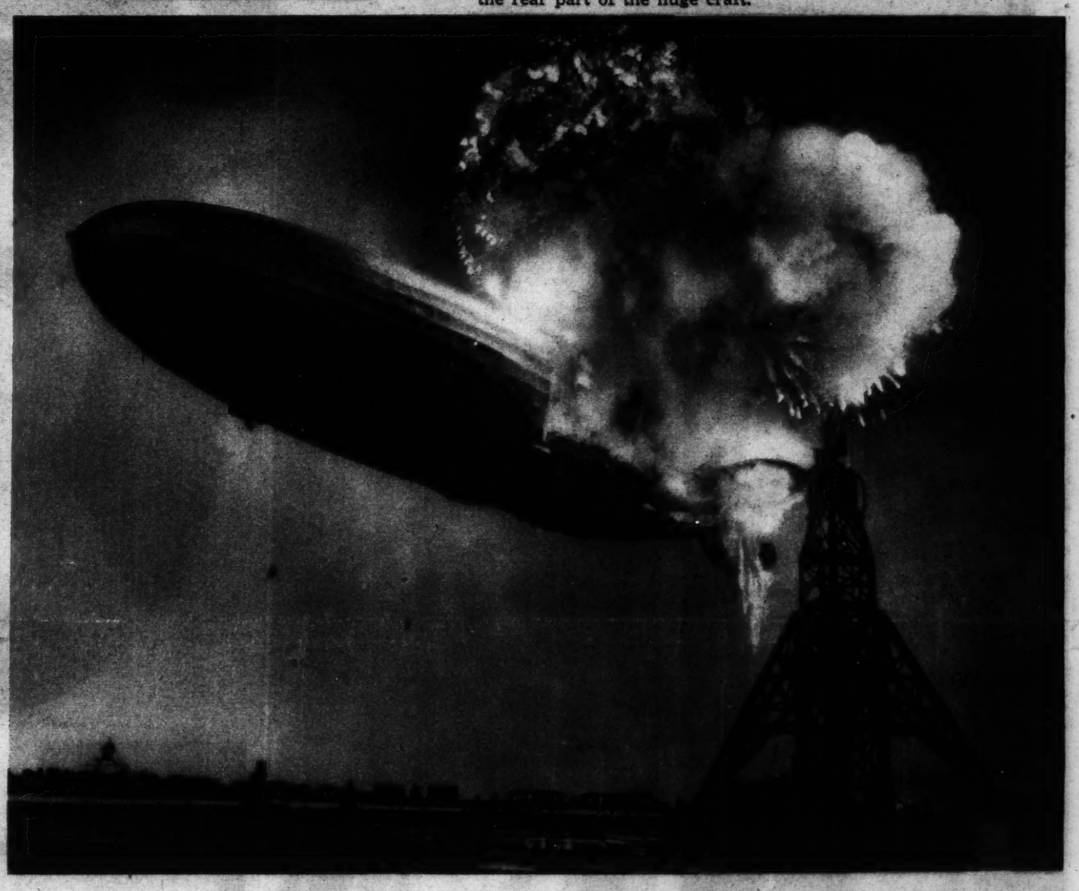

The most remarkable series of photographs ever made are reproduced on this page. They show, in sequence, the explosion and crash of the giant Zeppelin Hindenburg at Lakehurst, N. J. Photographers covering the routine arrival of the dirigible procured these pictures which have never been equalled and possibly never will be again. Photos by Wide World and AP.

1. WITH NO THOUGHT of the catastrophe which was to take place in a few minutes, the photographer snapped this photograph of the Hindenburg as she circled the landing field at Lakehurst.

2. DEATH AND DESTRUCTION were only a few seconds off when this picture was made. Note the smoke emerging from the rear part of the huge craft.

3. LIKE A GIGANTIC DISPLAY OF FIREWORKS, the great trans-Atlantic airliner explodes. The terrified passengers and crew are trapped in an inferno.

4. WITH FLAMES RISING to mountainous heights the air queen trembles and begins her descent to earth. The mooring mast may be seen in the foreground.

5. THE HINDENBURG SMASHES into the earth, a mass of flames. Many of her crew and passengers were literally baked. Survivors are shown trying to escape after reaching the ground.

6. GIANT HINDENBURG settles to earth for the last time. The tiny specs around the base of the ship are a part of the crew and passengers who had survived. They are shown running wildly from the wreck.

7. FLAMES WERE ENVELOPING the entire structure of the ship when this photograph was made. The specks underneath at right of the ship are persons who jumped when the crash came.

8. THE SMOLDERING RUINS of the majestic air liner which only a few minutes before had completed her 21st crossing of the Atlantic ocean,

THE CAPITOL OF CUBA is constructed of Georgia marble and is one of the world's most beautiful buildings. When members of the Georgia Press Association visit Havana this month they will be entertained there by the president of the republic.

HISTORIC MORRO CASTLE, one of the famous spots to be visited by members of the Georgia Press Association during their annual convention in Havana, Cuba, this month.

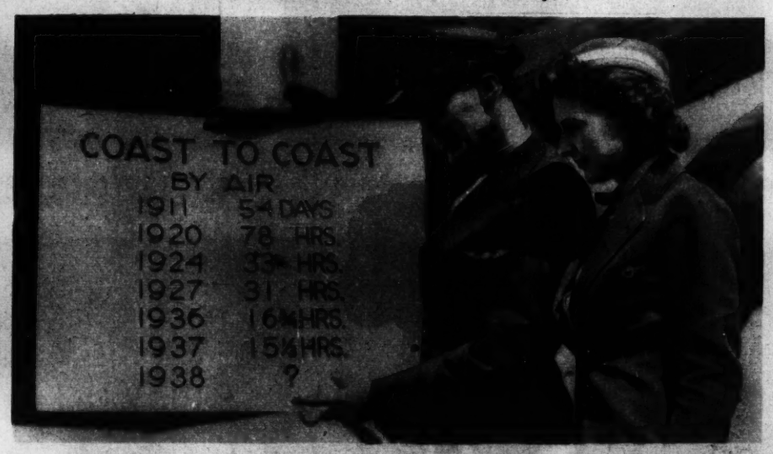

MISSES MARY ELIZABETH BARGE, left, and Henrietta Collier, of Atlanta, photographed in the costumes they wore as ladies of the Queen's Court in the Elizabethan Festival staged by the students of Sweet Briar College, Sweet Briar, Va.

(Left) BEAUTY—Miss Frances Soloman, of Norfolk, Va., named most beautiful at the University of Alabama. She is a member of the Alpha Chi Omega sorority.

MRS. BURKE HEDGES, of Havana, who has been appointed chairman of the reception committee to receive members of the Georgia Press Association and their honor guests, Governor and Mrs. E. D. Rivers, during their annual convention to be held in the Cuban city this month. Mrs. Hedges was formerly Miss Georgia Brown, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. George Brown, of Atlanta.

WHAT WILL THE FUTURE BRING? An interesting chart revealing how aviation has progressed in the last 25 years in clipping off weeks, days and hours of actual flying time from coast-to-coast.

AMONG THE MANY SPECTATORS who watched the launching of the U. S. S. Savannah at Camden, N. J., recently were, left to right, Mayor Robert M. Hitch, of Savannah; Miss Jane Mayo Bowden, also of Savannah, who christened the new 10,000-ton cruiser named for the Georgia city, and Mayor George Brunner, of Camden.

LIFER AT 40

WHEN hair falls out and roots wither away, Nature locks the door against new growth, and the sentence is baldness for life.

Don't let this happen to you!

If your hair is thinning at the temples, if your comb is gathering wool from your crown, come to the rescue with Kreml.

If your hair is still in the full bloom of youth, help to keep it that way with Kreml.

With the first application, you'll experience a wonderful sensation. Your hair seems vibrant with life; your scalp tingles with a feeling of cleanliness.

For Kreml contains certain special ingredients that remove every speck of dandruff, stimulate the scalp and stop excessive falling hair.

A wonderful dressing, too. Kreml gives a glowing luster to hair, makes it easy to comb without plastering it down like a gigolo's well-greased head. Women like it for the pretty sheen it gives the coiffure.

Ask your druggist for Kreml. Call for it in the barber shop.

"Wire going away for a rest...in the Lincoln-Zephyr"

An upland road through Onondaga County, New York, beckons to the motorist who drives a Lincoln-Zephyr.

LONG distance is the LINCOLN-ZEPHYR's best friend. A short trip from home to office proves the car's agility in traffic, its quick-on-the-trigger response. But do five or six hundred miles! Then this superb new car shows what it was built for . . . reveals its uncanny ability to rest you as you ride!

This is a big car, and has a big car's ways. (The wheelbase is 122 inches, the distance between springs 133 inches.) It is slung low. Chair-height seats look like lounges. You settle down comfortably. Three sit in the front seat barely touching. The front seat is about 7 inches wider, the rear seat 5 inches wider than in conventional cars.

Now, with a quiet, confident surge of power, the LINCOLN-ZEPHYR slips away. Here is a new rhythm of motoring—a flowing glide. The feel of the car is different. Gone is the jogging, swaying motion that wearies back-seat riders. The rear seat is well ahead of the rear axle, and so removed from disagreeable road shocks.

The LINCOLN-ZEPHYR has a V-12 engine which gives 14 to 18 miles to the gallon. It has an all-steel, one-piece body and frame. It has new ideas, proved ideas that put it years ahead in safety, in comfort, in economy, in value! . . . Perhaps you're not getting the enjoyment out of motoring you ought to get!

TREASURE HUNTERS OF THE SEA . .

Men dive for many things. One is gold. It never rusts and all the gold sunk in ships since the first lost cargo lies somewhere below, bright on the sea's floor. This year men are diving for millions in sunken treasure on the Lusitania. But the sea holds treasures other than gold. Scientists are continually discovering new mysteries. Deep down stretches a world of scenes to be photographed, mountains to be climbed, biggest game to be hunted. Here crawl deeper canyons and stranger jungles than any known, waiting for brave explorers.

HOW DIORAMA WILL LOOK FINISHED

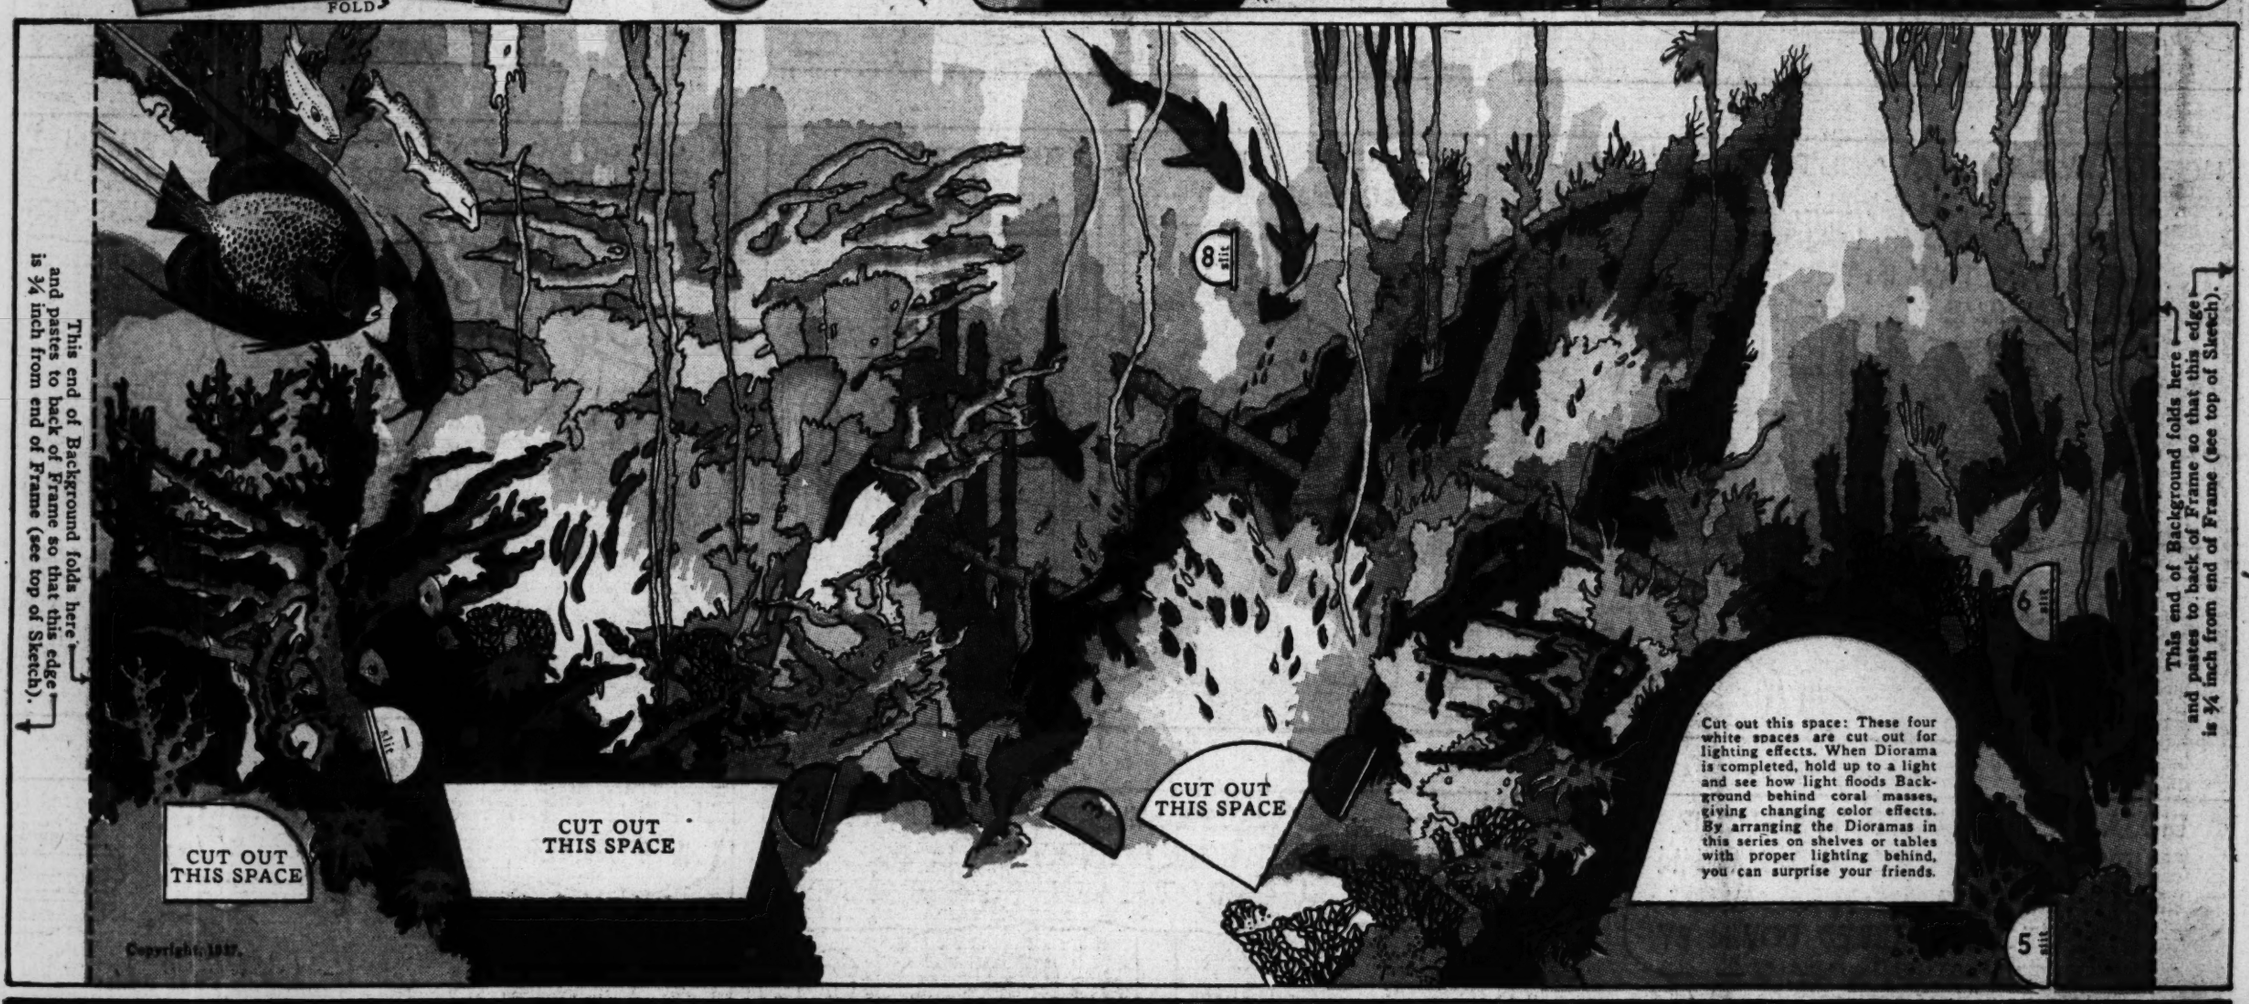

SKETCH OF DIORAMA showing how it looks when pieces are assembled. Note how the Background curves and is pasted to the front Frame from behind (see top of sketch). Three pieces labeled "Mass of Coral," "Stern of Wreck" and "Diver and Treasure" key into Background with numbered tabs and slits to form this undersea scene. But no sketch can give you the feeling of distance and third dimension which you will find when you finish this Diorama. Full directions at bottom of page.

AUTHENTIC CUTOUT DIORAMAS

Model Building for Young or Old

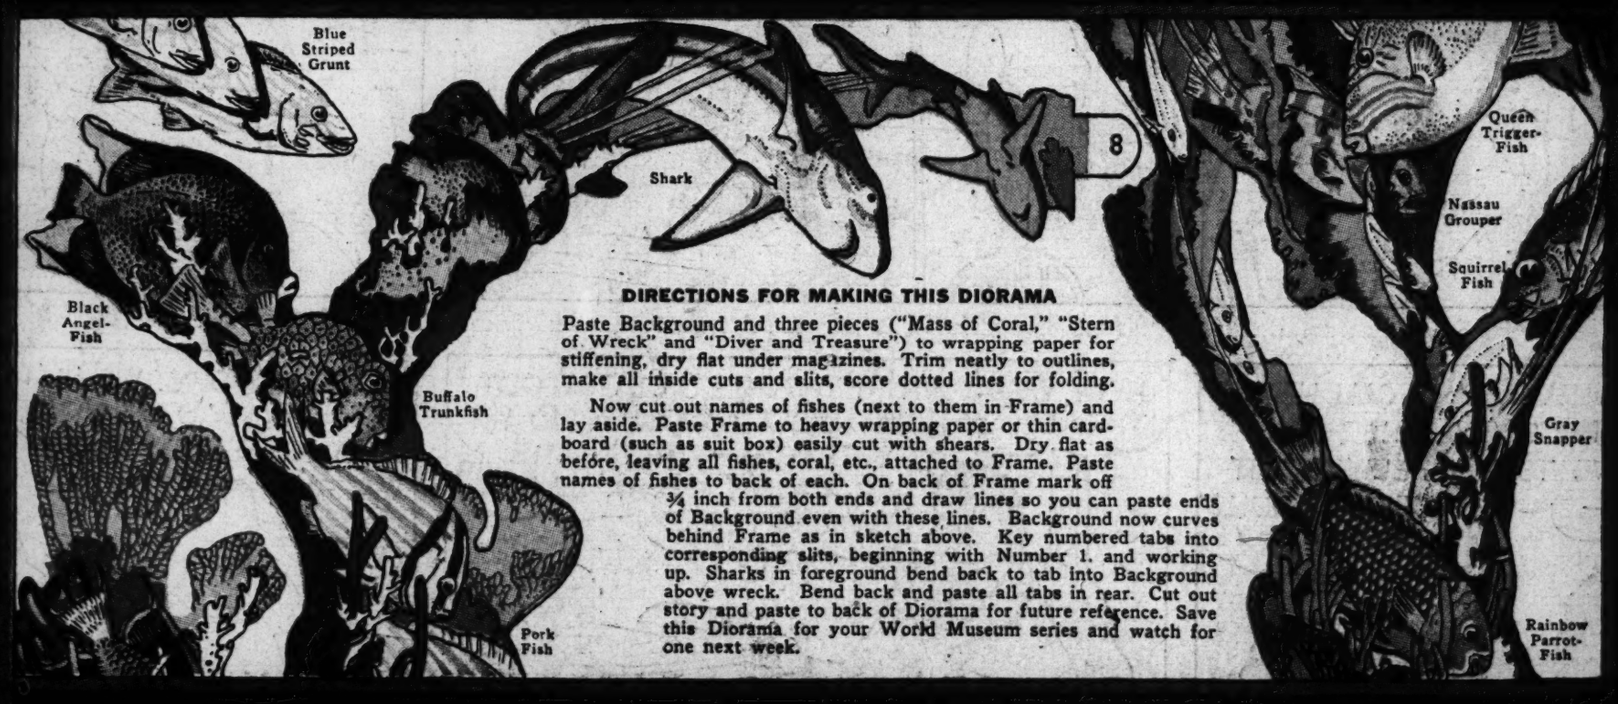

Scientists explore shallow reefs in swimming trunks with a metal hood over the head. Pumped air keeps water out. Because of great water pressure below sixty feet divers wear heavier helmets and rubber suits. Greater than surrounding water pressure must be the air pressure inside the helmet at all times. Lungs transmit this pressure to the blood like pumping a tire, until inside and outside pressures balance. At one hundred thirty feet, water presses sixty tons against a diver's body. Cut his airhose, and he is crushed.

DEPARTMENT OF EXPLORATION

THE WORLD MUSEUM OF THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION

DIVISION OF DEEP SEA DIVING

DIRECTIONS FOR MAKING THIS DIORAMA

Paste Background and three pieces ("Mass of Coral," "Stern of Wreck" and "Diver and Treasure") to wrapping paper for stiffening, dry flat under magazines. Trim neatly to outlines, make all inside cuts and slits, score dotted lines for folding.

Now cut out names of fishes (next to them in Frame) and lay aside. Paste Frame to heavy wrapping paper or thin cardboard (such as suit box) easily cut with shears. Dry flat as before, leaving all fishes, coral, etc., attached to Frame. Paste names of fishes to back of each. On back of Frame mark off ¾ inch from both ends and draw lines so you can paste ends of Background even with these lines. Background now curves behind Frame as in sketch above. Key numbered tabs into corresponding slits, beginning with Number 1. and working up. Sharks in foreground bend back to tab into Background above wreck. Bend back and paste all tabs in rear. Cut out story and paste to back of Diorama for future reference. Save this Diorama for your World Museum series and watch for one next week.

Type of suit and helmet for deep sea work where water pressure can be equalized by air pressure in helmet.

TREASURE HUNTERS OF THE SEA

A diver among coral reefs off the West Indies approaches an old Spanish wreck. The sharks are after schools of fish and will not attack the diver. The largest fish in the foreground (excepting the sharks) are less than two feet long.

Type of all-metal diving suit for work in great depths where no human body can withstand water pressure.

BRIDGE ACCORDING TO CULBERTSO

By ELY CULBERTSON.

NOW that you know the rules of Jo-Jotte suppose you sit down and play a game with me.

I pick up one of the packs of 32 cards, shuffle, and push it toward you to be cut. Here are our original six cards:

E. C.	YOU
♠ J 7	♠ Q
♥ None	♥ K J 9
♦ A	♦ Q
♣ Q 9 7	♣ K

The thirteenth card (which is turned up as a tentative trump) is the nine of spades. Your hand is not much good at spades, so you say, "Pass." At spades I am sure to win a trick with the jack of spades since it is the highest trump. That will give me 20 points. The ace of diamonds will give me 10 more. And I have the right to exchange the seven of spades for the nine—if the spades are trumps. That will give me 15 more points—a total of 45. That is plenty, to say, "I'll play it." Your hand is much too weak to double and you lack the stoppers and high cards which would justify a no-trump overcall. You have no choice but to pass.

Now I deal three more cards to each of us and turn up the bottom card of the pack, the ace of hearts. Then we assort our hands and this is what we see:

E. C.	YOU
♠ J 10 7	♠ K Q
♥ None	♥ 10 K J 9
♦ A K	♦ Q
♣ Q J 9 7	♣ A K

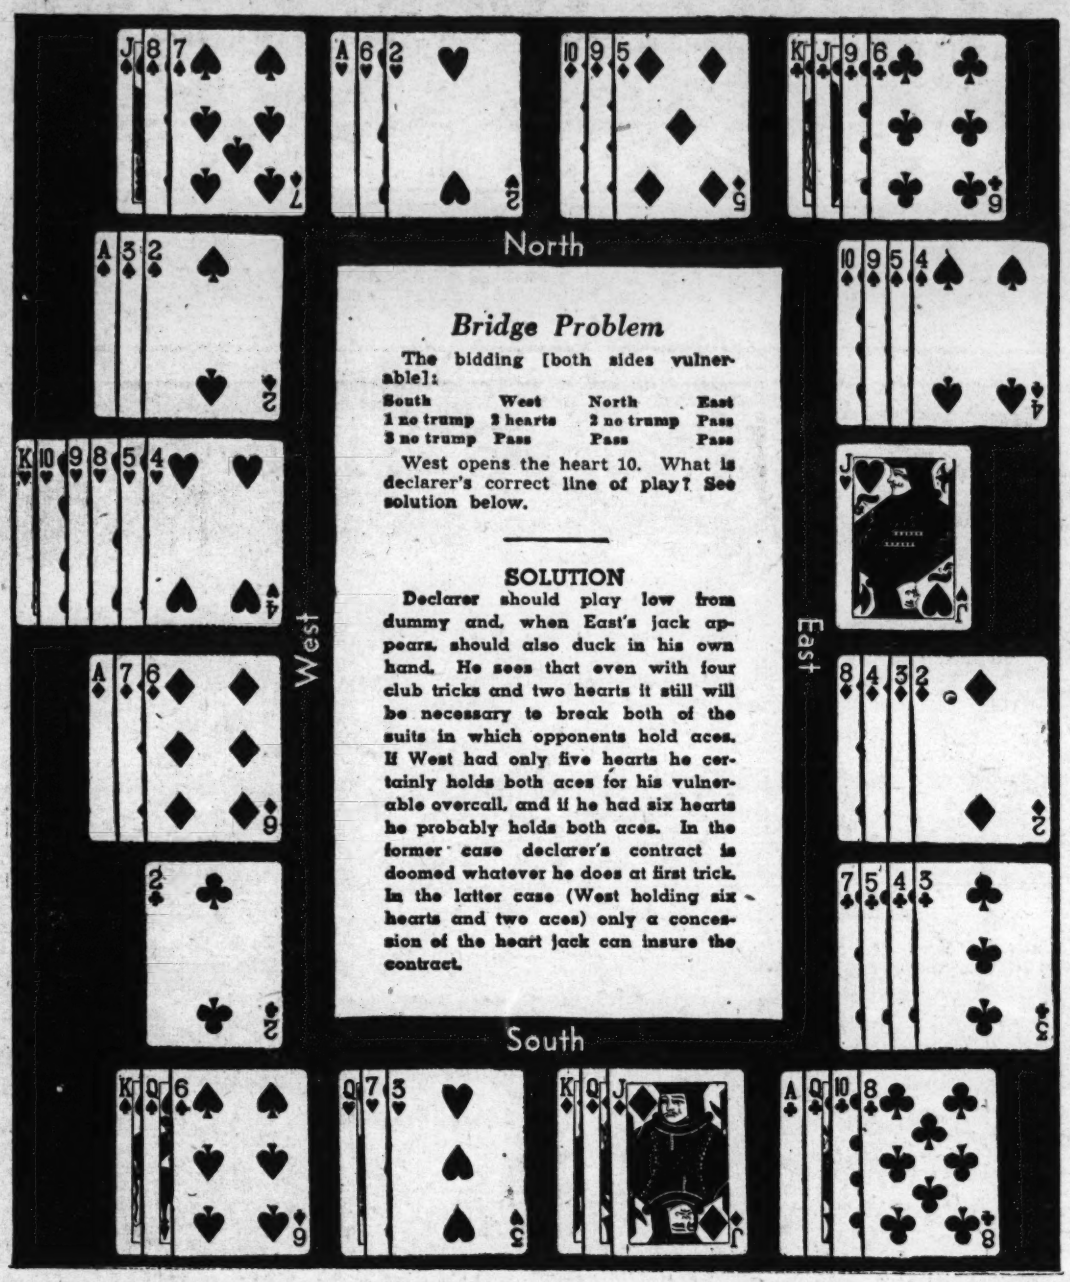

You now have a good hand. That king and queen of spades is the Jo-Jotte. You have a three-card sequence in hearts (J-10-9) and your ten of hearts is the high card in the suit (as long as the ace of hearts has been turned up). And your high cards in clubs are not to be sneezed at.

You begin the melding by saying, "Twenty." I exchange my seven of spades for the nine of spades and say, "Equal." That means that I have a twenty also. You say, "To the jack." That means that the highest card of your twenty is a jack. Even though both twenties are headed by the same card mine wins because it is in the trump suit. So I show my J-10-9 of trumps and score 20 points above the line.

Some Careful Play.

Now you look around for a good opening lead. You realize that it's a good idea to lead your long suit; you may win control of the hand. Therefore you lead the ten of hearts. I trump with the ten of spades and win the trick. Now it is my turn to lead. I don't want to take out trumps because then I would not have a very good chance to win the last trick. I must try to make you trump also, so I lead my long suit. I return the jack of clubs. You win that trick with the king of clubs and continue your forcing game by leading the nine of hearts. I trump with the nine of spades and lead the nine of clubs. You win the nine with your ace and make me use my last trump, the jack, with your jack of hearts. There is still a chance that my diamonds will enable me to win the last trick. I lead my queen of clubs. You trump with the king of spades and remember to say, "Jo."

You lead the king of hearts. I have no more trumps, so I discard my seven of clubs. Now you lead the queen of trumps in order to win the last trick. I know your other card must be the queen of spades since you said "Jo" when you played the king. So I win the ace of diamonds at once and give you the last trick. You carefully say "Jotte" as you take it and then we count.

Bridge Problem

The bidding [both sides vulnerable]:

South	West	North	East
1 no trump	2 hearts	2 no trump	Pass
3 no trump	Pass	Pass	Pass

West opens the heart 10. What is declarer's correct line of play? See solution below.

SOLUTION

Declarer should play low from dummy and, when East's jack appears, should also duck in his own hand. He sees that even with four club tricks and two hearts it still will be necessary to break both of the suits in which opponents hold aces. If West had only five hearts he certainly holds both aces for his vulnerable overcall, and if he had six hearts he probably holds both aces. In the former case declarer's contract is doomed whatever he does at first trick. In the latter case (West holding six hearts and two aces) only a concession of the heart jack can insure the contract.

The Scoring.

My tricks.	Pts.	Your tricks.	Pts.
♠ 10, ♥ 10	20	♣ K, ♣ J	 5
♠ 9, ♥ 9	15	♣ A, ♣ 9	10
♠ J, ♥ J	20	♠ K, ♣ Q	10
♦ A, ♦ Q	15	♥ K, ♣ 7	 5
		Jo-Jotte	20
		Last trick	10
Total	70	Total	70

We each count 70 points for tricks. But I point to the score sheet and show the 20 I had melded. That won the hand for me. So I score 70 points below the line and you put your 70 points above the line on your side of the score sheet. I did not make a game, even though my total score was 90 points. Only my trick-score counts toward game and that amounted to only 70 points—a very juicy part-score.

You are not discouraged because if you get a good hand on the next deal you can score a game and wipe out my part-score just as you would if we were playing bridge. And I heave a sight of relief. For a beginner you certainly gave me a lot of trouble.

The Planets—Your Daily Guide

By BERNICE DENTON PIERSON

Bernice Denton Pierson, eminent astrologer, has prepared this forecast in brief for a handy reference convenient to Constitution readers. This guide will aid you, for it indicates the most auspicious time to begin any new endeavor, whether it be business, social or domestic.

MAY 16—SUNDAY: The day as a whole will be favorable for pleasant associations, equitable dealings, and social contacts, but previous to 10:08 a. m. carries warnings to use caution in travel, hasty speech and impetuous action.

MAY 17—MONDAY: You may find you are misunderstanding the motives of others, or you are not able to "get together" so easily before 10:42 a. m. Use care in your diet at this time, and be cautious around liquids and chemicals. Real estate transactions, business that involves old established ideas, and produce are apt to encounter some stiff obstacles during the entire day. After 8:16 p. m. is the most favorable part of the day, favoring work that requires carefulness, dealings with women, artistic efforts and friendships.

MAY 18—TUESDAY: The combined influences today have two distinct and opposite tendencies. Careful, sober and thoughtful ideas are promised success, and affairs that bring you in contact with able and consistent people or ideas should advance. On the other hand, there will be strong assertions made in the heat of anger, and you will be wise to avoid such encounters. Announcements of a drastic nature will be made in personal lives as well as in world conditions.

MAY 19—WEDNESDAY: The same opposite and drastic tendencies prevail before 1:29 p. m., so plan to be as impersonal as possible around people and affairs that are trying to "blow-up." Between 1:29 p. m. and 4:31 p. m. favors work requiring energy, contacting those who may be superior in any way, or at the head of affairs. This is not an auspicious day for undertaking heavy responsibilities, affairs relating to land and mines, but is more favorable for ordinary duties.

MAY 20—THURSDAY: Family interests, heart affairs, beauty, artistic and social matters may progress favorably during the entire day and evening, but minor restrictions and irritations in general affairs will be inclined to bring a peevishness if you do not aim to show the pleasant side of your nature.

MAY 21—FRIDAY: Carlessness and inattention run through all the activities of today, which is not conductive to attaining the best results, in whatever you are attempting. Previous to 11:32 a. m. slightly favors domestic ideas, beauty ideas, and dealings with women.

MAY 22—SATURDAY: It will be well to give business and so... cial associates every consideratio... before 5:12 p. m. for you are a... to encounter a let-down feelin... or meet with coldness which wi... retard matters. Do not enter in... affairs that you desire to progre... in an aggressive manner. Aft... 5:12 p. m. favors activity whethe... you use your energies in sports o... business, or merely in disposing o... the work at hand quickly.

HOW TO USE THESE INDICATIONS TO BEST ADVANTAGE.

If I Hadn't Been a Barrymore

By Lionel Barrymore

As told to Clarke Wales

Louisa Drew, one of the great actresses of her day and grandmother of John, Lionel and Ethel Barrymore.

Lionel Barrymore will be seen in "Captains Courageous."

Georgia Drew Barrymore with her famous children, Ethel, 6 (left), Lionel, 8 (right) and John, 4 (below).

ONE of the questions all of our family industriously duck is, "What is the Barrymore tradition?" or "Has it helped being a Barrymore?" or something of that sort.

Personally, I never heard of the tradition.

My family is the same as any other family. We have our little family jokes, customs and all that sort of thing. The only difference is that Mr. and Mrs. Schmidt and their family are allowed to enjoy these things in peace, but in our family they're quoted and repeated, and then classified as a part of this tradition that people talk about.

Because my family was of the theater, I suppose, I naturally drifted into acting. I didn't want to. I wanted to be an artist. I tried to. I studied hard in Paris. But somehow I drifted back into acting. We all did. Ethel set out to study for opera. John got a job as cartoonist.

I don't think it has anything to do with acting being in the blood. It's just being born in the business. A grocer's son often follows in his father's business. Does that mean that he has tomato catsup or canned beans in his blood? Acting is a business we learned from childhood, from our association with professional parents and professional friends. We just grew into it. If my parents had been engineers, I suppose we'd be engineers.

The theater and the screen have been good to me. I have met many interesting people; had many interesting experiences. For the screen I am especially grateful. I remember, when I first went into pictures 26 years ago, how my stage friends looked at me pityingly. Poor Barrymore, they thought, had gone in for the disgraceful leaping tintypes.

But I saw something intensely interesting in them. I wrote stories for Griffith on Long Island. I acted parts, sometimes heavies, sometimes comedy, between stage work. John did the same. He was a fine light comedian.

Then, one day, in a comedy, he made a horrific face at the director for a gag. The result was that they put him in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," and started him in characters. Unexpected things like that make pictures interesting. It was fascinating to watch them progress from the crude one-reelers of that time, to such spectacles as "Romeo and Juliet" or "Born to Dance," or "Maytime."

I WAS talking to a young actor, who worked with me as a juvenile some years ago on the stage, about it not long ago. He was complaining about studio work.

I reminded him of our theater days, when he was getting about $75 a week and dressed in an ill-smelling closet with a wooden shelf for a dressing table; of the one-night stands, strange theaters, getting up in the middle of the night to make dates, and so on. I compared it with our beautiful dressing rooms at the studio, the possibility of having homes, cars, dogs and more money than we ever dreamed of in those days. "You may be dissatisfied," I told him, "but I breathe a sigh of thanks to Heaven every time I drive through the studio gates."

But all this is getting away from why we keep on acting. It becomes one's life work, and one's success. It becomes as serious a profession to us as a doctor's is to him, or a scientist's, or a lawyer's, or even a bricklayer's.

That's why actors carry on. And that's how the spirit of "the show must go on" originated.

I have seen Lewis Stone, so sick he could hardly hold his head up, working on the stage, pretending he felt fine, rather than hold up production. And when a sick man acts like a well man, he is acting the most difficult kind of role. I remember how Luise Rainer, in "Escapade," cut her foot on a camera track, and insisted on going on with the scene as if nothing had happened.

When my sister Ethel sprained her ankle, while playing in "Rasputin and the Empress," she just taped it up and carried on with the scene.

Not long ago Robert Greig played one of the funniest scenes in his career, and not a person on the set was allowed to suspect, until after the work was over, that in his pocket was a cablegram telling of the death of his favorite brother in London.

Joan Crawford played most of "Montana Moon" with a cracked ankle. When it happened, on location, it was suggested that the production be postponed. "Most of my scenes are sitting on a horse," she remarked, "or sitting on a rock while the leading man sings to me. I won't be on my feet at all, so why delay the picture?" She stuck it out and finished it.

Just the other day I saw Paul Porcasi, in a cast because of a body bone fracture, don a dress suit and play a scene. He asked the director to arrange it so he wouldn't have to walk, and got through with it perfectly. Tilly Losch danced her dance of the flame in "The Good Earth" with a sprained ankle, taping it up and forgetting that it hurt.

THEY call this a tradition. I think it's a part of the particular set of mental reactions and traits that go into the mind adapted to acting. Actors are sensitive to dramatic impressions. They are, perhaps largely by practice, able to transmit these almost involuntarily. They constantly dramatize. That's why they make very poor poker players; they can't conceal their thoughts or emotions as well as people in other callings. And this idea of "the show must go on" is part of that psychology.

On the stage, to fall down on the job would disappoint an audience. On the screen, delays cost the producer huge sums. And any workman takes pride in delivering the goods, and doing the job expected of him as well as he knows how. We are no different from any other workers in this respect. I would feel truly sorry for the man or woman who didn't have this particular pride in his work.

In the old days of the stage this was traditional. Players put heart and soul into their work. Sometimes I hear it said that modern screen players don't do this to the same extent. I believe that they do.

When I watch the utter concentration with which Garbo plays a scene, unconscious of anything about her save the character and the play, I see in her the same spirit that was in the great stage actresses of yesterday. In "Camille," in which I played with her, I rather marveled at this concentration. But I have seen Modjeska, Margaret Anglin and many others of the stage concentrate the same way. Luise Rainer is another whose concentration is amazing.

I have seen Robert Montgomery rehearse time and again in his dressing room to perfect a piece of business. I have seen Clark Gable study and practice for hours.

WHEN people ask me to talk of the old traditions of the stage, and all that sort of thing, I'm inclined to reneg. In the first place, I don't like to look backward, but forward. I would rather envision the progress of the future than the traditions of the past.

In our business today we have to do this. Nothing changes so fast as the technique, methods and literature of the screen. Nothing is so fatal to the actor as to fall behind the times, and nothing is more easy to do.

The practical thing is to look forward and try to be one jump ahead of our changing business. For instance, a few years ago we made up by painting our faces with grease-paint. Today with facial inlays the makeup expert can literally put other people's faces on us, as Jack Dawn put Andrew Jackson's face on mine in "The Gorgeous Hussy."

This means that today the screen doesn't have to go out and hunt for a man to look like a certain character.

Today, as never before, is the day of the character actor. In the old silent days all stories were of adolescent love, and pretty young girls and handsome boys were the stars. When sound came, it was found that sophisticated lines weren't convincing out of the mouths of babes, and the older generation of players came into their own. This change has progressed in several forms, another instance of the rapidly-changing practices in pictures. I wish I could predict what the next great change will be.

THAT'S why I think that tradition is sometimes dangerous. Too many of us are apt to lean on it a little, and that's like trying to steady oneself by leaning on the shoulder of a ghost.

When we look at the meteoric rise of a fellow like Robert Taylor or Jimmy Stewart, unknown yesterday, acclaimed by millions today, we realize this important fact.

I don't know whether players of the screen will ever become traditional in the sense that Modjeska, Duse, Bernhardt, Mansfield, Booth and Barrett and such stars of the stage are.

For one thing, the life of a film play is much shorter than their stage plays were. A film is released, plays to millions in a short time, then is supplanted by a new one.

A stage play traveled the country with a star, playing to small groups at a time. The stage star could return to a city annually with a play. Audiences would gather, to see if the star played the role the same as before. This made the life of a star's role in a play much longer than a role in a picture. And this built up, over periods of years, the tradition and reverence with which we look back at the grand old stars of yesterday.

We have many players as good today. We will have them in years to come.

So, after all, why all the fuss about tradition, anyway?

HAS JUSTICE TRIUMPHED?

By PETER LEVINS.

DID SINA POPE GODWIN receive a fair trial? Has Justice been done in this extraordinary case in which the defense was that Mrs. Godwin killed her husband in a pistol duel?

The people of North Carolina have been debating the issues of the Godwin shooting ever since it happened, nine months ago. Mrs. Godwin has been convicted and sentenced, the jury having been satisfied that her duel story was a lie. But the verdict has been appealed and today the woman walks the streets of Dunn, N. C., at liberty pending a decision by the state supreme court.

One thing which may have weighed unfairly against the attractive, 36-year-old matron was her past life, not to mention her tigerish temperament.

She had married three times. Back in September, 1919, she was indicted and convicted of bigamy after she married Slocumb Jackson, wealthy farmer, while still the wife of Clyde Maynard. Judgment was suspended upon payment of costs, the story being that Jackson settled with Maynard for $1,000.

One child, a daughter named Hortense, was born of the second union in 1920. Eventually Jackson landed in an insane asylum, where he died after eight years. While he was in the institution his wife had numerous affairs, according to local gossip, and began living with Furman Godwin, well-to-do tobacco farmer and World War veteran, before Husband No. 2 died. When he did die the rumor mongers whispered that she had poisoned him to get his estate.

Before Sina married Godwin in 1934 he made a will leaving his property to Hortense. (This was to be declared void upon allegations that Sina had forced him to make the will.) The couple and Hortense lived on Godwin farm, a mile from Dunn, and it was there that the shooting took place lat the afternoon of July 7, 1936.

The authorities — and mostly every one else in Harnett county—already knew that matters had not been going any too smoothly in the Godwin home. The couple had been quarreling fiercely for weeks. On two occasions peace officers had been summoned to quell disturbances. On the second occasion they found Godwin wandering in his underwear in the woods near the house.

He asserted that his wife, threatening to kill him, had chased him out of the house with a gun and that he was afraid to return.

On the afternoon that Furman Godwin breathed his last the first officer to reach the scene was Chief of Police George A. Jackson, a capable sleuth with an excellent record. He found the farmer lying dead in the yard—five bullets had been pumped into him —and beside the body was a pistol, the emptied barrel imbedded in the dirt.

Mrs. Godwin lay on a bed in the house, apparently in a bad way, for she moaned that she had been shot by her husband. Chief Jackson saw that she had been nicked in the left hand.

While the officer was giving the woman first aid, her father, J. C. Pope, entered the bedroom with a pistol, which he said he had found in the yard, not far from where the body lay. The barrel was clogged with dirt. Pope informed Jackson that the weapon belonged ti his daughter.

That there had been a duel, in which Godwin had been the aggressor, seemed beyond any doubting, for there had been two eye-witnesses, Mrs. Godwin's mother, and her cousin (who was also her sister-in-law), Mrs. Albert Pope.

Relatives Back Up Duel Version.

Mrs. J. C. Pope said that Sina and Furman had been having trouble for several months. The difficulties, she said, had arisen out of the husband's attempt to have Sina sign over her crop as security for a fertilizer bill he had made. There had been a bitter quarrel the previous day, Mrs. Pope told Jackson, with the result that Sina had spent the night with her.

The mother related that she and Mrs. Albert Pope had just returned to the Godwin place with Sina when the shooting took place. Sina went to the rear porch, the other women remained in the car. Godwin, who had been working in a nearby field, came on the run, tore open the screen door at the rear of the house, whipped out his six-shooter and began blazing away at his wife.

According to the stories told at the scene and later at the inquest, Mrs. Godwin grabbed her husband's gun in her left hand, held it until all six shots had been fired, then opened fire herself. Godwin, rather thoroughly riddled, staggered off the porch into the yard, where he collapsed. His wife followed him, sat momentarily on a bench near the dying man, then ran into the house.

Mrs. Godwin was rushed to Highsmith's hospital in Fayetteville, the nature of her wounds still being unknown. However, it was soon established that she had received a superficial wound in the left hand.

The coroner's jury returned the following verdict: "Furman E. Godwin came to his death at the hands of his wife, who killed in self-defense."

The funeral services were held the next day. Among the floral offerings was a tasty ten-dollar design from the widow, who was unable to attend. She said she'd be glad to go were she able, because she still loved Furman. She reiterated that she had shot him "because he made me do it."

Chief of Police Jackson kept right on investigating. The more he investigated the more evidence he found indicating that Mrs. Godwin had cooked up that duel story. Witnesses informed him that here had been two distinct volleys—one outdoors which dropped Godwin, the other indoors a few moments later. In other words, it appeared that, after shooting her husband, the woman went inside and shot herself in the hand.

Meanwhile, the Pope family kept issuing statements on Sina's condition. She was seriously ill, they said. She had been shot through the liver. On one occasion they said she wasn't expected to live through the night.

Dr. J. F. Highsmith Jr., head surgeon at the hospital, contradicted these pessimistic statements. "She hasn't been very sick any of the time," she said. "She could have been removed several days ago, had she wished." Nurses reported that she seemed to be in the best of spirits.

The patient was removed to the Dunn Convalescing home on July 25. There seemed to be no doubt now that she would survive that flesh wound in her hand.

Early in September it began to appear that Mrs. Godwin would soon find herself in serious difficulties with the law. Jackson had been working hard on the case; County Solicitor Claude C. Cannady had become active, and the citizens themselves were clamoring for a prosecution.

On September 4 Cannady announced that he would send a bill of indictment to the Harnett county grand jury the following Monday. On that day, Monday the 7th, Mrs. Godwin sold her country home and took up her residence in Dunn. Two days later she was indicted for murder in the first degree. (Incidentally, the name of Furman Godwin had been drawn to serve on the jury which indicted his widow.)

Two officers immediately hastened to Mrs. Godwin's home to place her under arrest, but she was away at the time. When she returned and learned what had happened, she drove to Lillington, the county seat, and surrendered herself to the court. She was allowed to go back to her home after posting $3,500 bond. She produced the cash at once.

The trial of Sina Pope Godwin opened in Lillington before Judge Edward H. Cranmer on November 23rd. Her lawyers were the firms of Young and Young, of Dunn, and Ross and Ross, of Lillington. Solicitor Cannady was assisted by two prosecutors retained by the Godwin family—County Attorney I. R. Williams and Neill McKay Salmon.

Mrs. Godwin, clad entirely in black, entered the courtroom on the arm of Attorney J. Robert Young. She sat low in her chair at the counsel table, keeping her fur collar over her head and her hat brim down over her face. Observers noted that she was wearing two diamond rings on her right hand. As the proceedings got under way she appeared to take full command of her own defense. Her attractive young daughter remained at her side at all times.

The first witness for the state was Chief Jackson.

He testified that he found Godwin lying dead at the southeast end of the Godwin home, with a .32-caliber pistol, completely emptied, lying in the dirt at his side. The back porch, he said, was spattered with blood, and there were bullet holes in the weatherboarding of the house and in the ceiling.

He found Mrs. Godwin in her room, lying on a bed. She was complaining hysterically.

Section of Spine Produced in Court.

The witness identified two pistols, both of the same make and model, as the guns he found at the scene. Mrs. Godwin's gun had been fired six times.

Police Officer C. E. Broughton, who had accompanied the chief to the Godwin home, corroborated his testimony.

While Coroner J. Melvin McLean was on the stand, for the purpose of identifying three battered bullets found on the porch; Solicitor Cannady introduced into evidence a section cut from Godwin's spine at the autopsy. It contained a lead bullet of the same type as those found on the porch.

Three colored farm hands, Esther Royal, Thallington Bethune and Malcolm Thompson, testified that they were working in a field within 150 yards of the house when the shooting occurred. They heard two volleys, they said, the second coming after Godwin had fallen in the yard and his wife had gone around the house.

According to these witnesses, Mrs. Godwin had arrived at the house about ten minutes before her husband, and that she had shown them a pistol and told them: "You needn't be afraid; this is for protection." Royal and Bethune said they were plowing in a field adjacent to the house when this conversation took place.

Bethune was positive that he heard a second series of shots after Mrs. Godwin left her prostrate husband and disappeared around the corner of the house. Right after the second shots, he said, there was a lot of noise and lamentations from within the house.

Annie Tew, colored, testified that on the day before the tragedy Mrs. Godwin visited her and discussed her plans. "She usked me if I knew Hattie Bell Wade, and I said I didn't," the witness re-

Young and Lovely

By Clarke Wales

A boat cabin in a movie is just about as far as Loretta Young can travel these busy days.

"SAY, there's a good story in Loretta Young," said the publicity man.

"Yeah?" I said, that being the thing to say when a publicity man says he has a good story.

"Yeah," he said. "When she finishes her next picture she's going to Europe. And after that she's going to give up a couple of pictures a year so she'll have some time for herself. Get the angle? 'Loretta Young Is Going to Live Her Own Life.' She's willing to give up the income from two pictures so she can do things she has wanted to do."

"All right," I said, "let's go talk to her about it," so we took our feet off his desk and went over to Stage 8 where she was making another picture for Twentieth Century-Fox and Darryl F. Zanuck. The picture, a comedy-melodrama with a background of the Spanish civil war, is called "Love Under Fire," which was the working title of an Irish revolution picture which Samuel Goldwyn finally released as "Beloved Enemy." It just shows the way titles travel around Hollywood.

On the stage Miss Young was resting in the berth of a ship-cabin set, while electricians and prop men and grips milled around getting ready for the next shot. She is also very lovely with her eyes shut.

SHE stops resting faster than a deer which has just got a whiff of mountain lion. When the publicity man called to her, she was suddenly on her feet and the next instant she was down off the set, smiling and bright-eyed. She sat down in a canvas chair and we talked about the picture.

"They (meaning the producers) think they have a melodrama," she said, "but I think it's going to be a comedy. What'll you bet?" The answer to that is practically nothing, because only the wildest long shot gamblers bet on things that are going to happen in Hollywood; but if Loretta Young says the picture is comedy, it's probably comedy. "Anyway," she continued, "we're having a lot of fun making it."

Then a messenger from the publicity department came in with an envelope full of clippings, and she said: "Excuse me a minute while I see what they're saying about me." She started looking at rotogravure sections and feature sections and pages from magazines.

"You know," she said, "you have to keep up with what is being written about you. So I asked the publicity department to send me clippings of everything. Besides, I have a little secretary who decided I ought to keep a scrapbook. I've been in pictures 11 years and never had a scrapbook before. But now I'm getting these clippings and she's putting them away."

INDIRECTLY but practically Loretta Young is her own press agent. The publicity department does the work, but she sees to it that it's the right kind of work, done properly.

While she was looking at clippings the assistant director started shouting: "Loretta Young! Loretta Young! Miss Young needed on the set!" He was standing about 10 feet away, looking at her.

"I'm here," she answered, and made a face at him. A makeup man brought her a kit and a mirror, and she repaired her makeup with powder and lipstick.

Apparently she is her own makeup expert, too.

For the next few minutes she was busy in the ship cabin, returning some missing jewels to Frances Drake while Don Ameche, a Scotland Yard lad who is going to arrest her even though he loves her, hung around outside. It was a short scene, and after a couple of rehearsals and three or four takes, Director George Marshall said "Good" and Miss Young came back and sat down.

For the sake of recording her thoughts for posterity, I asked her about this living-her-own-life business.

"Well, we're going to finish this picture tomorrow," she said—"two days under schedule. I'm going to have a week off and then make another picture. After that I'm planning a trip to Europe.

"I was going to go after this picture, but Darryl Zanuck wanted me to make another picture first.

"After I come back my contract—which calls for five pictures a year—will have a year to run, and after that I do want to have more time off.

"What will I do with it? I don't know. A couple of years ago I would have said 'Travel'; but I don't care how many maids and how many secretaries you have, traveling is work. I just want to do things that anybody might want to do. And to have some freedom. If I decide I'd like to go to Honolulu, I want to be able to pack up and leave, and not have to wait for somebody to say I can go.

"And given time, I would do some traveling. My mother is the best traveling companion in the world. If we're in Paris and I say at midnight: 'Let's go to Rome,' she says: 'All right, let's go to Rome,' and we pack up and go."

Loretta and Don Ameche in "Love Under Fire."

THEN the assistant director started calling for Miss Young again, and she went back to the cabin while somebody fired a revolver to indicate that a shell had struck the ship and three grips rocked the set with long levers made of two-by-fours.

While she was acting I called the publicity man over.

"Loretta said she has been in pictures 11 years," I said. "How old was she when she started?"

"Thirteen. You know her sister Polly Ann was in pictures, and a call came for her from a studio one day when she wasn't home. Loretta answered the call and went to the studio herself; she didn't like going to school and thought that was a good chance to get into pictures. She got into the studio because the gateman thought she was Polly Ann and when she got inside she talked the director—Mervyn LeRoy, I think it was—into giving her the job."

"Oh," I said, "and now she's going to start living her own life, huh."

When Loretta came back she was wearing a sort of hat which consisted of a twisted roll of bright paisley, like a halo, with a scarf attached so that it hung down under chin.

"Isn't this hat nice?" she said. "Do you like it?" I did and said so, which was fortunate because later I was told that she had designed it herself. She is to some extent her own fashion designer. All costume sketches go to her for approval, and often by the time they are completed they are full of her ideas.

SHE has made it her job to know as much as possible about the business of being a screen actress and the business, in general, of making motion pictures. Yet she works like a carefree child, as though she were playing games. While the crew was setting up for the next scene, Harold Huber, scar-faced menace of many a gangster film, came on the set.

"Hello, Glamour Boy," she called. "Come on over." When he sat down, she said to me:

"Glamour Boy is an insulting person. Do you know what he said to me the first day of this picture? He said: 'You'd better look good in this picture, because so far I'm the most beautiful one in the cast.' How do you like that?"

"Yeah," said Huber, "but you ought to see what she's doing to me. By the time the picture is done you won't be able to see me. Just to show you, the other day we had a scene with five people in an automobile—Ameche and I sitting beside Loretta in the back seat and two men in the front seat. And when we look at the rushes, the only one you can see is Loretta. The two men in the front seat are out of focus and they cover both Ameche and me."

At this point the head of the still department came to get Miss Young's approval of proofs of a batch of pictures. As she started looking at them, she asked for a fountain pen, then carefully went over the proofs, marking them for retouching.

"She practically makes every photograph of her that goes out of the studio," the still man said. "She says what she wants for backgrounds and how she wants to pose and how the camera should be set. And you can't fool her. She wants her pictures shot with a diffusion disc, and she knows whether the disc is in the camera or not.

"But she'll do anything reasonable to co-operate—let us come out to her house on Sunday to take pictures, or come into the gallery in the evening after she's worked all day, if we need something in a rush."

She handed the pictures back and a publicity man came up and said that a woman newspaper correspondent wanted to talk to her and the assistant director came over to ask her to rehearse the next scene, and she said "Goodby, Charlie" and "Have her come over and join the party" and "I'll be right there"—all without any fuss.

And I said "Goodby" and she said "Come back and see us some more; we'll have another picture going next week." Which I will.

AND I'm sure that there must be a very good story about Loretta Young living her own life—

Because she has never done anything else.

Allure Grows Before Your Eyes

TREAT yourself to a pictorial bracer. No matter how blue the day, nor how low you are in mind, this series of photographs should fill you with inspiration. Perhaps you've been mulling through one of those periods of discouragement over the face you have to carry around. Most of us do from time to time. Give a look and be relieved.

In Hollywood they call it gilding the lily. But that seems inexact to us, because the girl who was transformed resembled nothing so little as a lily to begin with. She went all the way from poverty to riches, cocoon to butterfly, in this experience Of course it was done with makeup. And why not? If little specks of powder and little drops of paint make a girl look like what she ain't—but needs to be—who will dare to say they aren't justified?

The only sin lies in misusing them. Learn how to manage cosmetics properly and you will be a happier and a healthier person. Any woman feels better when she looks better. Notice how this girl's expression changes from sullen bitterness to sweetness and light.

ACTUALLY, the only drastic changes made in her face by this corrective makeup were in the eyes and mouth. Her eyebrows were reshaped and darkened. The heavy, unattractive contours she had painted on her lips with the wrong shade of lipstick were erased and new lines were drawn so that the naturally full lips turned from a liability to an asset. Eyes and mouth are the most important features.

They covered her blemished skin with grease paint and powder, to be sure. And you can't do it that way. For ordinary every-day wear grease paint is too conspicuously artificial. Anyway, it shouldn't be necessary. We know now that it is all nonsense about good complexions being born. They are made.

The foundation is wise diet and good habits of exercise and elimination. Eat fruit and drink quantities of water. There is complexion beauty in green vegetables, carrots, sweet potatoes, liver, eggs, milk, raisins and prunes. Keep your skin clean and give it the benefit of at least one good cream and an astringent. Then if you master the use of powder foundation and rouge in combination with the right shade of powder, you'll never have to be ashamed of it.

Beauty from Hollywood

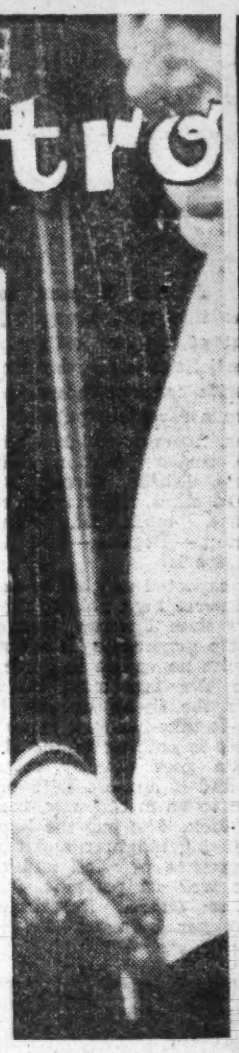

THAT my-what-a-smart-boy-am-I look on Jack Dawn's face as he surveys Miss Claire Owens after he has finished making a beauty of her is deceptive. He doesn't think he is the only one who can work miracles.

In fact he maintains that any homely woman can accomplish what amounts to a miraculous improvement in her appearance, if she makes the effort and has the courage and imagination. "Every woman can be attractive and should be," says Mr. Dawn.

Beginning at upper left and working down and around to the photo below, you can follow the steps to allure taken by Claire Owens, who has been firmly taken in hand by Jack Dawn, specialist in making people beautiful.

Maestro

"Arturo Toscanini will return to this country in December to direct a series of 10 broadcasts for NBC."

THIS news item, coming after the famous maestro's resignation as director of the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra and his return to his native Italy, drops like an aerial bomb into the midst of New York's music and radio world.

Music lovers are agog at the prospect of once again hearing — and perhaps even seeing — their beloved Toscanini. Musicians who have played with him in the Philharmonic or who are hopeful of being chosen for these broadcasts are both jittery and elated. The high commands of symphony and opera are in a turmoil.

What, I asked, is the power of this small, white-haired man who holds audience and orchestra alike under the spell of his baton? Who has boxoffice appeal in symphony such as symphony has never known. Who is called, alternately, a "devil," an "angel," a "madman," a "martyr," a "dictator" and a "liberalist."

AS A reporter who has gone down the bay to interview a varied assortment of celebrities arriving from Europe, I knew Toscanini only as one of the difficult variety. Most certainly, he was anything but friendly and easy to talk with—as most opera or concert stars are.

There was, I remember, the time in 1934 when he was arriving on the Rex for his season with the Philharmonic. When ship newsmen and reporters, who had boarded the liner at Quarantine, approached the maestro and asked about his plans, he gave us not only the cold shoulder but the entire back.

"Plans? They are mine, not yours!" he barked, and walked away.

Signor Toscanini was equally diffident last May when he sailed for Europe—sailed with the ultimatum that he would not return to the leadership of the Philharmonic. A brief, typed statement, "to be taken as a personal goodby and expression of gratitude to the thousands of persons who have come to my concerts and to the men of my orchestra," was issued to the press by his secretary.

IN CONTRAST to the maestro's diffidence was the hysteria of the audience which jammed Carnegie Hall for his farewell performance. Like the opening of the World Series, many stood in line all day for seats. Western Union boys were hired at 50 cents an hour to keep the places of the more affluent gallery sitters.

The frenzied ovation that followed Toscanini's last number on that big night made musical history, too. The hysterical, wildly enthusiastic crowd swarmed forward towards the stage. For a time this uncontrolled wave of humanity threatened to engulf and crush the frail little man who stood there on the platform. But even then, Toscanini did not break precedent. He said not a word. Finally, he motioned to his orchestra to leave the platform, and followed them.

Was it shyness? I don't know, for Toscanini is not without courage. You remember that he braved Mussolini's terrible wrath by refusing to direct the Fascist national anthem, "because it was bad music."

With this background, I started out to get a more intimate picture of this fabulous little man. I wanted to know how the musicians of NBC's symphony felt about playing under the master maestro. What about his old colleagues, men who had played with him in the Philharmonic and Europe?

SO, AS A first step, I thought of the large and efficient publicity department of NBC. Surely they could put me in touch with the persons I wanted to meet. They would know all the answers. But, to my surprise, I met with a dignified restraint. There was to be no publicity about Toscanini beyond the statement that the maestro had agreed to direct the NBC symphony of 45 men, augmented perhaps by 40 men he himself would select.

A full-length portrait of Arturo Toscanini, the man behind the biggest radio news story of the year 1937.

By Moscrip Miller

David Sarnoff, president of the Radio Corporation of America, laid particular emphasis on the fact that the return of Toscanini would in no way compete with Philharmonic or other major musical organizations. The statement said in part:

"The concerts will be sustaining and not sponsored. For each concert the maestro will receive $4,000 net, assuring him $40,000 in addition to all expenses for the series. He will perhaps offer several concerts using choirs and soloists, to be selected by him. At his request, he is permitted the privilege of adding two Carnegie Hall charity concerts."

That was that. Regretfully, the publicity department informed me that they could do nothing. It was pretty hard for an old reporter who had doubled at publicity to believe.

But there it was. A super musical attraction and the publicity department not in a dither, not grinding out reams of copy, not thinking up picture stunts.

Vaguely, I began to feel the undercurrent of turmoil in the high places of music. I began to get an inkling of far-flung power, the influence that Toscanini exerts.

ALTHOUGH a neophyte in the realm of concert music, I began to haunt the stage entrances of Carnegie Hall on rehearsal days. I had the names of a few musicians—a Russian Jew, a German, and two of the maestro's own countrymen—who might tell me what I wanted to know. Each had played with Toscanini here and abroad and had known him for years. But I was warned not to announce first hand what I wanted.

I found the orchestra a great international brotherhood in which prejudices of the homeland are left behind. I learned for the first time that different countries excel in different instruments—Russia for the strings, Germany the brasses, France the woodwind instruments.

Sitting in the adjacent Carnegie Tavern and Tap Room, where the musicians gather during breaks in rehearsal, these men and I talked of music, of the orchestra. Over their ale or schnapps, they talked readily in their difficult English.

Then Toscanini's name was mentioned. The ready flow of pleasantries slowed down, became guarded.

"Ach, a devil sometime. But vat a conductor." . . . "Sure, he breaks sticks, but that is not always"—this from the Russian—"it is only the temper of his genius. We who have played with him long, do not mind. It is the new ones. Never does he throw his baton at me. Not any more, anyway."

A young Italian, who proudly recalled that he first played with Toscanini at Bayreuth, "in Wagner's own house," explained a little more in detail, stumbling over his English.

"He insults, and I am what you call sore. But I forget, it is such satisfaction to play with him."

"Insults?" I asked. "How?"

"Oh, he may shout you are dilettante—what you say amateur. But then he is very nervous. He sleep five hour—sometime only three hour a night."

I suggested insomnia and the young musician gave me one of those you-don't-understand looks.

"The maestro, he work hard. He study the score. He know every note. One day, we are playing and he stop. He point at the third horn, he say, you don't play the last measure. He was right. What an ear!"

BIT BY bit, I pieced together the fragments. It took patience and tact. Enormous tact—for the moment that they suspected that I was there to get information from them, they closed up like clams.

Yes, he conducts without a score. He's too near-sighted to read it without glasses. But he never wears glasses at rehearsals or concerts. Vain? Maybe. An autocrat of the baton. Never remembers the names of his men, but never forgets mistakes. Suffers from neuritis; pain may contribute to his frequent rages.

But always, these men referred me to someone else. I finally returned to a musician, not with the symphony, who had given me the few names.

My friend smiled. "You do not know Toscanini. He is as temperamental as a prima donna. The men fear him, but play inspired music for him. Even though their names are not used, they are afraid that he might find out which of them had the temerity to discuss him. And, you know, although he resigned from the Philharmonic, there is always the possibility that he may return."

But Toscanini's power extends beyond the men of his orchestra. The hierarchy of New York's music world is excited.

"Why," said one informant, "it's very simple. With Toscanini building up and directing the NBC symphony it may well become the ranking orchestra in this country. Think what this will mean to the prestige of Philharmonic. After all—Toscanini was Philharmonic, at least its greatest drawing card in recent years. And now he returns to direct another orchestra that to all intents and purposes is his. And it will be a great orchestra, you can count on that."

Enter The 1937 W

WILL H. HAYS has been Hollywood's censorship dictator for 15 years, come last March fifth. One of his major tasks is, and always has been, to keep vamps out of the movies. He began throwing them to the lions after Erich von Stroheim made "Foolish Wives," and he's been fairly busy ever since, with an eagle eye out for them tucked away in a script or hiding in the closet of a master bedroom on some isolated set.

Alluring boudoirs with tiger skins on the floor, transparent portieres, luxurious divans covered with soft, Persian brocades, velvet cushions and orchidaceous ladies have been frowned on—lo, these many years.

Crisp, smart, modern are the watchwords of the moment. Heartless flirts must put their wiles into words since voices are heard on the sound-track. It becomes more difficult every day to be naughty—and talk about it.

NOT being a member of the Hays staff, I'm coming right out in meeting and say I miss the vamps. They amused me, entertained me and gave me a lot of pointers on what not to do in order to hold a man.

For, mind you, the vamps of old always pointed a moral. They didn't get away with a thing. The pure young sweetheart or wife invariably triumphed and the exultant exotic became "a rag and a bone and a hank of hair" before she was through with it. If she stole a spouse, she had hers taken away from her at the end of the picture.

And she was marvelous. Excuse me if I insist that Marlene Dietrich is a pale counterpart of such gorgeous creatures as Pola Negri, Nita Naldi or Betty Blythe, and that the seclusion of Greta Garbo is nothing compared to the complete concealment, retirement, solitude and isolation of Theda Bara, the greatest vamp of them all. She never appeared anywhere, never saw anyone except a few intimate friends, never spoke to a newspaper reporter, was never photographed by a candid cameraman, nor gave out a line that could be quoted.

Her sets were as tightly locked as Garbo's and she couldn't fill scrapbooks with publicity, for the press in those days didn't give a tinker's darn whether Theda Bara talked or didn't talk. Once in a while a city editor, with a dull Monday on his hands, used to bark out instructions for somebody to go and interview la Bara, in order to use that old Kipling thing, beginning: "A fool there was," but he knew, and the reporter knew, that it was all in fun.

HOW they dressed—or shall we say "undressed"—those wicked women of the silents! Adrian would have been baffled by the diaphanous garments, the lack of material, the scanty laces, the paucity of ruffles, frills and Gainsborough hats. How much to leave off and still be decent, was the cry of the dressmaker and designer. Keeping them dressed, and yet undressed—this was the problem confronting producer and public when negligees and decolletes were the vamp's delight. A pellucid scarf sufficed when Louise Glaum appeared in her spider-web gown.

How to be daring in dishabille caused brows to corrugate and nerves to snap like raw spaghetti when the big seduction scene uncoiled from the script. Everybody, including the office stenographers, strained the imagination in an attempt to think of something breath-taking in the way of a dressless dress. Visits to the local library brought suggestions from the world of flora, fauna and the sea. Reptiles came into favor as decoration over a snowy bosom, while portraits exposing lovely ladies of the middle centuries were in great demand.

Today a leg means nothing in a bathing suit or a pair of play shorts, but when Nita Naldi appeared on the streets of Los Angeles without a pair of stockings, gasps were heard on all sides, even though her dress was not very short and sandals encased her nice, wide feet on which the toe-nails were painted.

A thigh, peeping in genteel amazement from the fluted folds of a chiffon tea-gown, was as alluring to the populace as a French dive to a Boston subdeb. "What is the world coming to?" inquired shocked humanity from coast to coast, including Flatbush.

Naturally, the screen can't lag behind. Even if Mr. Hays hadn't put thumbs down on the vamps, life would have killed them. Girls of today can't be bothered to lure. They would rather swim or play tennis, but they have a pretty nifty line, at that, and their approach is almost as deadly as the love potions once proffered by Lucrezia Borgia. Flattery is still the way to a man's heart, regardless of his stomach, and the young things of today can lay it on thick.

AND it was some such thigh as this that brought Mr. Will Hays out of his law offices and political potentialities onto the Hollywood scene, with banners flying and a loud wail from a far-flung public.

Exit—vamps, bosoms, thighs, slinking, innuendo, sex, temptation, sirens, allure, Loreleis, Liliths, Circes, Bella Donnas, leopard skins, tiger rugs, rose petals, incense, moonlight, "Three Weeks"; Avaunt—Begone—and let's clean up the debris!

Where they expected us girls to learn about life I've never been able to figure out, any more than I know what the present feminine generation does about its vamping, with no vamps to guide it.

Along with the breeziness of the young man on the flying trapeze, the girl-who-dares-to-take-her-man came into being. There is nothing of the siren about her; she goes directly toward her objective and if a mere wife or a fiancee happen to be in the way, that's just their bad luck. She has the knack of happy, rollicking laughter and there is a fresh fragrance of wind and sun about her, as well as perfume ("My Sin") at $25 an ounce. Despite her frankness and her love of life, her dressmaking bills are still high.

"The 1937 vamp is laughing instead of languishing, but the methods of building up a triangle have not changed so very much."

Louise Glaum
"How much to leave off?"

Betty Blythe—"A thigh peeping in genteel amazement from fluted folds of chiffon."

"He knew he'd been vamped."

And Where Are the Sleek … Here's the Answer, with …

By Grace W…

LET'S take a look back into Theda Bara's past. When she vamped a man, he knew he had been vamped. She was as langourously beautiful as Scheherazade, as seductive as Cleopatra. Her great dark eyes smoldered like live coals, her night-black hair piled on her head in thick coils formed a startling frame for her ivory face; her silken garments were molded or swept about her luscious figure, concealing or revealing, as the role called for.

She must have vamped her way through a couple of hundred Fox pictures; in fact, Theda Bara and Tom Mix practically founded the Fox fortune and paved the way for Simone Simon.

Men are not as exacting as they used to be; the schoolgirl gets them with a Peter Pan collar instead of a divan of gardenias or a shaft of moonlight.

As Mrs. Charles Brabin, Theda Bara is today going social in Beverly Hills. Brabin, well known director and artist, seems happy and content, while Miss Bara is making up for her years of concealment by becoming one of the film colony's most popular hostesses. She is still lovely, with a warm, bright smile and with MYSTERY attended the appearance of Nita Naldi and Jetta Goudal on the Hollywood screen. Not that they came together, but in both cases their backgrounds were shrouded in mystery, which they apparently took no trouble to clear up. They both looked slightly Oriental and both distinguished themselves on the screen. They were gorgeously exciting in looks and manner.

Naldi liked nothing better than to shock the natives, while Miss Goudal kept much to herself and on the rare occasions when she appeared in public wore the most striking colors and costumes of bizarre design.

Miss Goudal is in her charming home in Beverly Hills,—the wife of Harold Grieve, interior decorator, who has done some of the loveliest houses.

Betty Blythe, "the Queen of Sheba," still has the whimsical expression, the charm of manner, the lovely figure and the naughty flash in her dark eyes which made her one of the screen's most alluring sirens. She appears often in the talkies and has a good part in Greta Garbo's "Countess Waleska."

Her sense of humor is unimpaired and she told me that she never sees nothing of the sinuous, mysterious, sirocco effects of her vamping days about her.

POLA NEGRI, who lured men to their doom with fascinating smile and slow, sultry manner, deep as a jungle pool, preceded Miss Dietrich from Germany and created much more of a furore on arrival in Hollywood. One of the first of the European exotics, she wore her black hair like a sleek cap over her well-shaped head, peered occultly at the world from her long green eyes, and moved like a queen of the Nile through the palm-shaded courts of the Garden of Allah. Ageless as the moon, she was the delight of all male reporters.

When Valentino died, she hurried across the Continent, swathed in black, attended the funeral, the casket of which was covered with a blanket of red roses—her gift to the departed—and came back more sultry than ever. She married a M'Divani prince, divorced him and is said to be living in a castle in Europe somewhere. She has returned to Hollywood two or three times, but has never made a go of talking.

Marla Shelton—"A sultry young miss from Oklahoma," a 1937 type.

Tilly Losch—"She is our most deadly Circe at the moment. Her hands alone have quantities of appeal."

herself on the screen any more. "I just take the money and buy linoleum for the kitchen floor," she said. She is the wife of Paul Scardon, a director in the silent days, and they have a ranch near Fontana, where Betty declares she is happier than she has ever been in her life.

AND what about "The Wolf Woman"—Louise Glaum, whose undressed dresses were the envy of all the other vamps? Remember how she fell through a mirror in her spider-web gown? There was a scene, with teeth in it!

"But I never got away with a thing," Miss Glaum admitted the other day. "I was the moral in the piece and from me young girls were expected to learn what not to do."

TIMES are getting tougher for Mr. Will Hays. The vamps are sneaking up on him, but he will have no trouble with their subtleties. They are as obvious as sunlight—with the exception of Tilly Losch. Tilly put on a danse exotique in "The Garden of Allah" which kept the audience silent as the grave, but inwardly excited. She is a lotus blossom, if ever there was one. Her hands have more sex appeal than all the implied nakedness of an earlier generation. That dance is still the talk of the town and probably the country.

As the alluring second wife of Paul Muni in "The Good Earth" she was a perfect Viennese, but, heavens, how she vamped him! She was Oriental in feeling, if not in looks, and her dancing was again an undulating dream set to mysterious music in a Chinese setting.

She is our most deadly Circe at the moment and, given half a chance, she will mow down good husbands and devoted fiances like wheat before a reaper. Auburn hair, gray-green eyes and a soulful look combined with a graceful, perfectly proportioned body and a dancing gift, along with a charming speaking voice—these will prove high explosives to the good girls of the screen.

REMEMBER when Myrna Loy was a vamp of Oriental extraction—with a face as secret as the Sphinx and a manner as ingratiating as a sing-song girl? Today, she is as modern as a Neon light, with a manner as crisp, brittle and sophisticated as a Park Avenue debutante.

Margot Grahame is a blond vamp who must be reckoned with. Her charms are deadly and when she turns the blaze of her fancy man-ward, the poor guy weakens like a fish out of water. Her roles in "The Three Musketeers" and in "Michael Strogoff" puts her tops, so far as I am concerned, and all her sinuous sisters may well consider before they attempt to out-beguile her, especially when she wears a low-cut gown.

Binnie Barnes is another who almost got her man, in "Three Smart Girls." She is moving into first position as the up-to-the-minute lady who captures the great lover, if he isn't careful. Binnie is a blond at the moment, clever, amusing and witty and her modern methods of vamping are becoming extremely popular at the boxoffice.

THEN there's Marla Shelton, a sultry young miss from Oklahoma, who has a sinister, sirenesque appearance and a captivating manner, which slays men, as Edmund Lowe in "Under Cover of Night," and sets M-G-M agog in hopes of another great Jezebel done in the modern manner.

Miss Greta Garbo likes a vamping role now and then, although such roles must be sympathetic and not cut on the Delilah pattern. She is willing to love her man to distraction, inside or outside the moral codes, but her wiles must be those of a lady. An exception, of course, is "Camille," but "Camille" has been an exception for every actress from Bernhardt to Jane Cowl.

Queens are allowed a lot of latitude also, it seems, as, for example, Garbo's Queen Christina and Dietrich's Catharine of Russia. Both Dietrich and Garbo like Continental stories—hence it must follow that their characterizations do not belong to the Ladies' Aid Society.

YES. Will H. Hays has been trying to keep the vamps out of pictures for 15 years, but he had better look alive. They're coming back in all their deadly, devastating devilishness, but they will probably be wearing bathing suits instead of negligees. They are laughing instead of languishing, but their methods of building up a triangle have not changed. They go after their man—and get him, while lovely wives and sweethearts wonder what has happened. And wonder and wonder.

These days the vamps teach no moral lesson. They have an up-to-date philosophy—"May the best woman win" and "let the loser take it on the chin—and smile!"

Cyrus Tipple, II

By Lucille Fletcher

ALL we could think about the other night when we visited the show on CBS called Professor Quiz was our old District Superintendent of No. 45, Mr. Cyrus Tipple.

Mr. Cyrus Tipple was the most magnificent and terrifying character of our childhood. Nobody ever knew when he was going to visit No. 45. He would open the door, walk majestically up to the teacher's desk, his nose-glasses glittering. A deathly hush would fall upon us as he was introduced. He would make a speech of gruesome jocularity about examinations. Then suddenly, without warning, he would point a finger at some hapless boy on the front seat and bellow out:

"If a farmer has four apples and gives a third to his wife, a fourth to his cousin, a sixth to his mother-in-law, how many apples has he left?"

It was a trying ordeal for us all at No. 45, as we sat there doing weird arithmetic in our heads. Yet there was something fascinating about it. We wanted to be called on, and yet we didn't. We wanted to get the answer right, and have a triumph in front of the school, and be told by Mr. Tipple that we were bright boys and girls. We wanted to—and yet we had a sickly suspicion down at the bottom of us that we'd fail, a suspicion that gave an air of danger to the whole thing.

Well, as we said before, we couldn't keep Mr. Tipple and his visits out of our mind when we visited Professor Quiz on a recent Saturday night.

THERE on the big stage of the CBS Radio Theater were five men and women—just waiting to have terrible questions thrown at them. And every one of them had that same sickly and yet excited expression on his face that we used to have long ago. There in the audience were a thousand other men and women—all agog to know whether the five on the stage would answer right or not.

And there was radio's substitute for Mr. Cyrus Tipple of No. 45—a man by the name of Professor Quiz.

The Professor didn't look like Mr. Tipple. He looked rather like a prosperous professional man, heavily built, dark, well dressed and boasting a little twirled mustache. He wasn't terrifying like Mr. Tipple, either. His style was more jocular and cheery than anything else. But he asked the same kind of questions that Mr. Tipple used to ask.

The questions were pulled out of a hat. That was one thing Cyrus Tipple never did. But it seems that the Professor wants his questions to be a matter of pure luck. He wouldn't dream of making them up himself beforehand.

In fact, to get his questions, he holds a special contest every week, and the people who send in the best lists of five questions get prizes of $25 each. These questions may or may not appear on the program. The Professor makes his own selection of all questions at his disposal, and the final questions are then typed separately on little pieces of paper, jumbled up in a hat, and each one of the five trembling people on the stage picks one out.

THE Professor reads each question off the little typewritten piece of paper. He reads it in a loud clear voice.

"How many decks did Noah's ark have?" he asked a hapless young man the night we were there. The young man didn't know, shook his head sadly before the microphone.

"Three!" said the Professor smiling gaily. He has a dashing smile. "Because it says in the Bible, 'With lower, second and third stories shalt thou make it.'" And he breezed on.

Everything from soup to nuts is picked out of that hat. There are usually six or seven rounds — and the questions range from definitions like "What is the difference between hobnob, kowtow and powwow?" to such tricks as "Spell soak. Spell poke. Spell joke. Spell the white of an egg."

Whenever anybody gets the answer right, the Professor's response is almost a reward in itself. He is famous for the phrase, "That is absolutely CORRECT!" It shoots the fortunate contestant up to the top of the world.

The fifth series of questions is the toughest. It counts twice as much as the other questions in the final score. In the fifth series, the Professor evens it up between the intellectuals and the non-intellectuals-who-are-still-clear-thinkers. The questions are such as these:

"A train starts daily from San Francisco to New York. One starts daily from New York to San Francisco. The journey lasts seven days. How many trains were traveling East in the seven-day journey from San Francisco to New York?"

(Answer—14. Because you must remember there's another one starting every day beside the one that started yesterday.)

Or—"A man walked up a street, counting all the windows on his right. There were 95. He turned down the street counting all the windows on his left. There were 95. How many windows did he count all together?"

(Answer—95. When he walked up the street he counted the windows on his left. In other words, the same windows were counted twice.)

Or—"A lady buys 4½ dozen eggs at 36 cents a dozen—the total cost, $1.62. Upon returning home, she finds that she has broken five eggs. Her husband is angry and says that five eggs could buy two car tickets. How much do car tickets cost?"

Answer—7½ cents apiece. Each egg cost 3 cents. Five eggs would be 15 cents. Therefore one car ticket would be 7½ cents.)

IF THERE'S any mike fright, embarrassment or nervousness among the five contestants on the stage, it shows up most on the fifth series. After all, it's no disgrace to say that a whiffletree is a "tree that the whiffle bird sits on." But it is ghastly when your brain gives out in the middle of a problem that turns out to be so easy.

School teachers, strangely enough, have the hardest time during the fifth series group. There are a lot of school teachers who apply on the Professor Quiz program. But only two or three of them have ever won a contest. That is because the fifth series ruthlessly levels them down.

Either it is because their training has caused them to specialize in book-larnin' instead of quick-on-the-trigger common sense, or because they take the Professor's problems too seriously.

There was a mathematics professor once on the show who couldn't work out what would be left if you took a third of five and a half of five away from five. He started working it out according to mathematical formulae, instead of using his common sense, and came out with a perfectly weird answer.

Which brings us to the kind of people who take part on the Professor Quiz show.

ODDLY enough, for all the mental effort required, it's not a show that attracts merely the well educated and the professional type. Everybody—janitors, chimney cleaners, typists, steelfitters—takes an interest.

Thousands of letters a week come to the Professor's office at CBS, asking for a chance to be one of the five whose wits are tested each Saturday night. There is a machinery for picking the winners—a machinery notable for its fairness. Five girls spend all day long extracting just the name of the applicant from the letters received. Only that name is put on file. No indication of the occupation, mental skill or age of the applicant is made.

Names are chosen in order of priority —whose name got there first. When your name comes up, you are notified by wire, and asked to reply by wire at once—collect.

Neither the Professor or anybody in his office has any idea what kind of person will come. Only one species of selection is ever used—and that is, that there must always be either three men and two women, or three women and two men on the show. Otherwise, it's all chance.

The Professor doesn't meet the five contestants until five minutes before the show. They arrive at the theater 10 minutes before that, look each other over, peek out through the velvet curtains at the thousand-strong audience assembling. Then a secretary comes over and pins on their name cards.

Not a rehearsal in a carload is the motto of this unique ordeal. Like Mr. Cyrus Tipple's visits, its charm lies in its unexpected pleasures.

SOMETIMES, at the last minute, just before the program goes on the air, a contestant will get cold feet. The sight of all those faces out in front and the sound of the audience chatter have gotten many a man. He'll excuse himself after a hasty glance, and take a walk for the nearest subway. In that case, volunteers are requested from the audience.

Two volunteers called up at the last second like that have walked away with the show. One was a Vassar girl, tall, slender, beautiful and smart, who was visiting New York for the week-end. Another was a lady from Texas who was on tour with a university football team. Both won the final prize.

All preparations for the show are as casual as the notification and selection of contestants. The questions, for instance, aren't finally picked or typed until a couple of hours before the broadcast. Only the Professor and the typist who transfers the final questions to the little slips of paper know what they are.

"And the typist types so many, she couldn't possibly tell her friends, even if she wanted to, which she doesn't, being a thoroughly honorable girl," explains the Professor.

Even the hat, out of which the questions are picked by each contestant and passed to the Professor to read, is a haphazard hat. You would think that when the hat plays such an important role in the show—being the focal point of luck, fairness, secrecy and what have you—that the Professor would keep a special one locked up in a cupboard between broadcasts. But not at all. He borrows anybody's hat that happens to be around.

Only one thing grieves the Professor —just as it once used to grieve old Cyrus Tipple of No. 45—and that is, he can't ask everybody his brain-sticklers. But the Professor does his best. He lets people compete, as we have said, by sending in lists of terrible questions for other people. He never does anything in the theater which the air audience doesn't know about.

IT IS amazing how popular this show has become with people all over the country. Hundreds of letters come in like this one—"Each Sunday evening several of my friends gather at a different house and with paper and pencil are ready at eight sharp for the best game of the week."

Boards of education write in, thanking the Professor for his educational appeal. Teachers discuss the Professor Quiz questions in class.

A great-grandmother of 80 writes—"If I were a few years younger, I would certainly try to enter the contest. It would not be because I am not able to attend, but I am afraid of the microphone, and I am sure I would forget everything I knew."

People spend hours compiling lists of questions. Some of these are amazing. A Polish professor thinks up—"Under which temperament, sanguine, phlegmatic, choleric and melancholic, would Cicero and John Sobieski be listed?"

A Canadian chicken farmer sends in—"What part of the body is known as the third lung?"

"Such hard questions are a little too ruthless for what we want," explains the Professor. "We don't ask things that are too technical—just technical in a general sort of way.

"For instance, we have discovered that we can't ask many technical music questions. In spite of the fact that hundreds of musical terms are used over the air, and that people listen to operas, symphonies and the like, musical questions trip up almost everybody. We couldn't even ask the difference between a sharp and a flat."

Professor Quiz didn't originate the show—left all that in the hands of those who were really in radio as a business. A bright young newspaperman down in Washington, D. C., John Heiney, cooked up the original idea.

Maybe he had memories of one Cyrus Tipple, just like ourselves!

Professor Quiz reads a question and gets a snappy comback.

Bride on a Budget

By Sara Day

IN EVERY city and hamlet this May-time brides-to-be are knitting their pretty brows over the problems of stretching dollars to buy trousseaus adequate to their needs. So in order to help you solve your problem I asked Robert Kalloch, designer for Columbia Studios, who has dressed some of our most famous screen stars, to aid me in planning a budget trousseau. You ought to be able to purchase this carefully thought out bridal wardrobe for approximately $275.

"The beauty of this trousseau," said Kalloch, "is not only its reasonable price, but also the fact that several of the items can carry you on into winter months. Then, too, there may be a number of things on this list which you already have, and that will cut down the budget even more. If you are handy with your needle you can whip up several cotton or linen shirtmakers and perhaps a wash formal to pad out this trousseau. We have made no provision for scarfs, handkerchiefs or jewelry, knowing that most every girl has enough of these to carry her."

THE first and most important item is the wedding dress. After looking at a number of them,

Here Jean Parker selects and models a budget trousseau for you. The wedding dress, princess style, is in the finest bridal tradition.

A going-away outfit that can be worn several different ways.

Kalloch and I chose this one, designed by Patricia Perkins. You should be able to buy it for $22.50, a sum almost any girl could afford, and it can be dyed either brown or black and serve as an evening dress through the winter months (minus the train, of course).

The dress has a lovely filmy quality, made of net, and the Juliet cap is very becoming. The white crepe sandals to go with this may be dyed black to go with the evening dress provided for in the budget.

Jean Parker, who is a recent bride and who recently signed with Columbia, was so delighted with the going-away costume we selected that she purchased one for herself. This ensemble was picked up because it could be worn several different ways. The print is black and white, and so may be worn with either black or white accessories—equally smart.

If you are not the type to wear the youthful off-the-face type white pique hat which Jean wears, then try a brimmed hat instead. We suggested white pique gloves not only because they are smart but, more important, because they wash well.

For cocktails or dinner there is a black bengaline cape with white pique lapels which may be worn over the going away dress with a large black straw hat, black suede gloves and black patent shoes. For more dressy occasions of this nature we provided a black crepe afternoon dress, a start for your winter wardrobe, which may be dressed up with clips, flowers or pins.

For a Bride on a Budget

Wedding dress, including slip and veil	$ 22.50
1 pair white crepe sandals (to be dyed later)	4.00
1 black and white going-away ensemble	20.00
1 white pique off-the-face hat	5.00
2 pair white pique gloves or other washable fabrics	3.00
1 pair black suede gloves	4.00
1 pair black patent leather sandals or pumps	8.50
1 black patent leather bag	5.00
1 white bag	3.50
1 large black hat (straw or stitched linen)	7.50
1 black bengaline cape	7.75
1 simple black afternoon dress	16.75
1 peach colored two-piece knit dress	14.00
1 white reefer coat	16.75
1 silk shirtmaker dress	13.75
1 white felt hat	5.00
1 black linen skirt	5.00
1 white sweater	4.00
1 pair black and white or white spectator sports shoes	5.00
1 simple black dinner dress with jacket	19.75
1 cocktail hat of grosgrain or faille	6.50
3 nightgowns at $3	9.00
3 slips at $3	9.00
1 foundation garment	5.00
3 brassieres at $1.50	4.50
1 crepe or taffeta negligee	10.00
1 pair mules	2.50
6 pair hose at $1	6.00
1 bathing suit	5.00
1 washable shorts suit	2.95
1 pair beach sandals or tennis shoes	1.95
1 toweling robe	6.00
1 pair of linen slacks	4.00
1 pair house pajamas	7.50
1 active sports shoes in white buck	5.00
Total	$275 65

YOUR black patent leather bag to accompany these outfits may be bought for less than $5, but Kalloch suggests that if you have one good black bag it will last you for a long time. A white bag may be purchased for less ($3.50), but at best they are perishable.

Whether you are planning a boat trip, a honeymoon to the mountains or seashore, the resort clothes selected will see you admirably through the summer. First on the list is that good old standby, the knit suit, this time in a luscious peach shade. Over this goes one of those new and very swagger reefer coats in white flannel which may be worn with all casual clothes including the silk shirtmaker suggested in pastels.

You may wear the sweater to the knit outfit with your linen slacks, and it would be equally smart with a black linen skirt. With a white felt sports hat, your white wash gloves, extra white sweater and linen or buck spectator sport shoes you are well equipped for all informal occasions.

Kalloch suggests one good black evening dress of formal cut with a jacket to be worn at the more informal affairs. The dress, if it is good material and of simple lines, may be worn right through the winter season with a change of accessories such as jewelry, chiffon, hankies and, if your new husband's pocketbook will stand the strain, a sequin jacket.

To go with this outfit he adds a cocktail hat preferably of grosgrain or faille, so that it can be worn the year 'round.

THE underwear budget is skimpy, allowing for only three nightgowns and slips at $3 apiece. But Kalloch and I both decided that the average girl usually has a fair stock of underwear and stockings anyway and, too, she is usually the recipient of numerous gifts of this nature at showers. The six pair of stockings we allowed for are suggested in three-thread chiffon in a sun tan shade because they can be worn with everything.

There are any number of lovely printed satin and crepe as well as taffeta negligees which can be bought for around $10. If you are handy with your needle you can make one for less. Mules to go with this may be bought for $2.50.

For resort wear on the honeymoon—and later, too.

In looking at bathing suits I discovered that you can purchase a very nice looking satin Lastex maillot or one of the new silk jersey dressmaker suits for around $5. For tennis or any other active sports you can find cotton short suits in attractive prints any place from $1.95 up, but you can get a very nice one for $2.95. To wear with both your bathing suit and shorts you can get a pair of those net sandals or the regulation tennis shoes. To wear over your suit, a Turkish toweling robe ($6) is ideal, because it can be easily laundered.

If you have more money than this to spend you can still use the basic principles of this budget and spend the extra amount proportionately. And if you are feeling really extravagant, Kalloch suggests some lovely underwear, one gorgeous nightie and some very sheer stockings to wear with your evening clothes.

Four Who Passed the Nugget Test Come to Your Radio Sunday Nights

By Bernes Robert

IN THE college town of Hanover, N. H., there still stands a small movie house known to thousands of Dartmouth College alumni as the Nugget. The fact that the Nugget still stands is something of a miracle, when you think of the amount of cat-calling and peanut-throwing 10 or 15 generations of college students have let loose within that small box of a place.

But there are two other remarkable things about the Nugget. First, there was the time of the Big Flood, which cut off all means of ingress from the outside world. That week the students, daily patrons of the cinema, sat through seven continuous days of Laurel and Hardy in one of their less ambitious productions.

Secondly, in this scarred and tortured structure Werner Janssen passed the Nugget test. To discover just what this may be, you have to go back to the day of the silent pictures and the inevitable accompanist. Janssen, now a world renowned composer and conductor, played the piano in the Nugget. He played the piano in the Nugget, waited on table and washed dishes in a restaurant, played piano for lunch at a hotel, fiddled and played an organ on Sunday, and went to Dartmouth College.

That takes care of his allotted 24 hours a day pretty well, except for his studying. And he did his studying while playing the piano at the Nugget. From 7 p. m. to midnight he made sad, sweet, menacing, merry, tragic music and hoof-beat-sounds with his hands, and at the same time learned something about Charlemagne's reign and logarithms from the books propped up before him.

But one night, in a classical fervor for higher learning, he slipped in a little Beethoven. A well aimed pop bottle and a shower of peanut shells told him of his patrons' displeasure. From then on he gave his public what it wanted, and his public liked it. He passed the Nugget test.

The fact that he doesn't make hoof-beats on the piano any more, but conducts the best orchestras in pieces by Sibelius and Brahms and Wagner, is beside the point. His public wants Sibelius and Wagner now. These people he will play for on his Sunday night program, and he will have with him three other well known men who met their Nugget tests and passed them with very presentable marks on their report cards.

WITH Janssen will appear Don Ameche, radio's pre-eminent matinee idol and now a movie star of rising importance, and Edgar Bergen and Charlie McCarthy, a comedy team of a new species.

Ameche passed his test very early in his professional career, but Bergen and McCarthy didn't get a chance at it until this winter.

Ameche was being bored with law books at the University of Wisconsin at Madison. A stock company came to town and one noon the second male lead walked down the street, his mind filled with sugar plums of rave critics' notices. An automobile not at all interested in critics' notices hit that actor. The impresario, needing a new Adonis to fill the 9AAA's of the battered Adonis, looked at the lineup of substitutes and is freely quoted as saying: "It would take a Houdini and a Thurston working twelve-hour shifts to make a Barrymore out of these hams."

Ameche was remembered from appearances with the college dramatic club. At three o'clock that afternoon, after a three-hour seance with a long part, he made his professional debut. The report card testifying to the results of his Nugget test took the form of a contract with the stock company. Later he played the juvenile for Fiske O'Hara in "Jerry for Short." More stock, a Chicago show and then vaudeville with Texas Guinan.

But Ameche at heart is one of those people who like to know that mail won't be following them all around the country. He wanted to get used to one hotel room. Traveling started to pall.

Bernardine Flynn, a classmate of Ameche's at Wisconsin and now a member of the Vic and Sade radio team, recommended the airwaves. He came to Chicago and, after the usual stints, landed on First Nighter. Enter stardom, Hollywood, a morose little epic called "Sins of Man," a happier celluloid task, "One in a Million," and then "Love Is News," which was fun.

Now Ameche is being nominated as the big double-threat ladies' man; he is transmitting masculine appeal over the microphone and from the screen simultaneously, and our scouts tell us that the feminine population of the country is showing a distinct interest.

THE team of Bergen and McCarthy is another proposition altogether. First of all, Bergen was born in Chicago 34 years ago and came from a long line of Swedes. McCarthy was born in Chicago 17 years ago and came from a long line of white pines, probably that flip youngster third from the left. The ventriloquist's dummy was carved with loving care by a Charlie Mack (hence McCarthy). Flippant Charlie furnished the answers to Bergen's questions through long years of vaudeville and Chautauqua. Charlie, dressed as an urchin, helped Bergen through Northwestern University when the two appeared on the circuit and, during the winter, in vaudeville houses in Chicago's suburbs.

Charlie only worked part of the time in Chautauqua; Bergen varied his act with cartoons and magic. In vaudeville they got themselves pretty famous for their best known skit, "The Operation."

Then one night they entertained at one of Elsa Maxwell's famous get-togethers in New York. The word reached the producers of the Vallee Hour that they were terrific. Bergen and Charlie appeared with Vallee on the evening of Dec. 14, 1936, on the Variety Hour, gave the public what it wanted (although everybody was positive it didn't want a ventriloquist) and the public liked it. Charlie and Bergen had passed the Nugget test. Now you can see them in movie shorts and maybe in a feature picture next fall. And you can listen to them on the radio Sunday nights.

You should know, too, that Charlie has discarded his urchin outfit and, as befits a topliner, now appears exclusively in top hat, white tie and tails.

THESE four personalities make a remarkable combination when they get together for their broadcasts.

You have Don Ameche, who receives proposals from young girls although he is very happily married to a school friend.

You have Charlie McCarthy, who has been willed $10,000 by Bergen. The sum is to be administered by the Actors Fund of America and the income is to be used to hire ventriloquists who will work with Charlie to entertain orphans and children in hospitals.

And you have Werner Janssen, who married Ann Harding in London last January amid much hubbub in the press. But Janssen was used to the press doing hubbubs—hadn't he been awarded a three-year scholarship in 1930 for study in Rome because of his symphonic work, "New Year's Eve in New York." He was applauded by the great Sibelius himself for his all-Sibelius program in Helsingfors. He was the first native New Yorker to conduct the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, after leading most of Europe's best organizations.

(And just for the sake of irony, we include Janssen's record with NBC, over whose wires now gallops his music. In 1927, while picking up nickels and dimes to keep him in coffee while working on symphonic compositions, Janssen went to work for NBC conducting concerts over the air. He was fired in a few weeks. Two years later, fired inexplicably from the Roxy Theater orchestra, he went to work for John Royal to compose and conduct for NBC in Cleveland. Here he did musical journalism, among other things visiting the county jail and writing a very good news story, in music, titled "Jail Wail.")

There you have them—four who passed the Nugget test and now salt away each week tidy little nuggets of their own. But the nuggets glitter instead of hiss. And they don't throw pop bottles.

Reviews of New Films

By The Boulevardier

Miriam Hopkins and Joel McCrea who run riot through the delightful nonsensical comedy, "Woman Chases Man."

'Woman Chases Man'

Completely screwy slapstick, with Miriam Hopkins and Joel McCrea. Recommended. Goldwyn-United Artists.

The "My Man Godfrey" cycle continues to be one of the major elements of screen entertainment, with Samuel Goldwyn's "Woman Chases Man" the latest contribution to the art of insanity.

In this one Joel McCrea is a sensible young man whose chief aim in life is to avoid being like his prodigal father, Charles Winninger. McCrea has a million dollars and Papa, broke, wants some of it to use in a real estate scheme. Miriam Hopkins, a starving girl architect, sets out to get the money for Papa so Papa can get her a job.

When McCrea comes home from Europe, he finds in the house Miss Hopkins and two ridiculous servants, Ella Logan and Broderick Crawford (Helen Broderick's son). The maid, a former theater usher, talks out of the side of her mouth and waves guests to their chairs; Crawford, to whom she is married, calls the guests "Pal." It is very clubby.

With him McCrea brings an adventuress (Leona Maricle) who intends to marry him, nick him and then run away with her boy friend (Erik Rhodes).

Both Miss Hopkins and Miss Maricle discover that McCrea will buy anything when he has a few drinks under his belt, and that makes things very funny, too. The picture ends with Miss Hopkins and McCrea, both cockeyed, up in a tree and with the rest of the rast rolling around on the ground in a struggle scene that looks as though Mack Sennett had made it.

Miss Hopkins is much better when she is funny than when she suffers on the screen, in spite of the fact that she is a competent emotional actress. McCrea unbends surprisingly, Rhodes gives his consistently amusing impersonation of a phoney count, Miss Logan and Crawford are entertaining and Winninger steals about half the picture. His scenes when he is impressed into kitchen service are very funny, particularly when he prepares dinner in the back yard because he can't cook indoors.

"Cafe Metropole"

Tyrone Power and Loretta Young in another farce, fast and funny. Recommended. Twentieth Century-Fox.

Darryl Zanuck, who has been hitting a brilliant stride the past few months, has reunited Loretta Young and Tyrone Power in another farce of the same breed as the very successful "Love Is News." The result is first rate entertainment and considerable more glory for the Young-Power team.

There isn't much sense to the story, but that doesn't hurt. Power, a young American, has enough left out of a million-dollar inheritance, after paying taxes and lawyers, for one good binge in Paris. He falls into the hands of Adolph Menjou, a charmingly unscrupulous cafe operator, who forces him to pose as a Russian prince and to make love to the daughter of a millionaire snubber manufacturer. There is complication when a waiter in the cafe turns out to be the real prince, and more complication when Power and Miss Young fall in love.

The recent Zanuck comedies have hit a higher level of a satire than is usual on the screen, starting with "Sing, Baby, Sing." In "Cafe Metropole" good fun is poked at American tourists, at Russian refugees and at American taxes.

Gregory Ratoff did the original story and wrote in a fat part for himself as the real prince, "25 times related to the Czar, five times legitimately." Charles Winninger, who has suddenly hit his pace on the screen, is the girl's father, and Helen Westley is his outspoken sister. She has a hilarious scene in which she tells French police she is a gangster's moll.

Power shows a rapidly increasing facility on the screen. He was handsome and romantic to start with; now he is handsome, romantic and entertaining.

Miss Young is still, for my money, one of the loveliest creatures on earth.

"Angel's Holiday"

Jane Withers in a comedy melodrama, with romance by Sally Blane and Robert Kent. Acceptable. Twentieth Century-Fox.

Dance band musicians have an expression, "corny," to describe the efforts of a mediocre horn tooter to "get hot." It means that the licks are obvious, a sort of superficial blatting that does not come from the heart.

"Angel's Holiday," Jane Withers' latest picture, is corny. It has everything in it, including the kitchen sink, a vaudeville rube act, Jane doing imitations and Joan Davis playing a jug. It's awful corny; you can see every gag coming; but still the darn thing is funny.

And it has Jane Withers, who in just this type of picture became the eleventh best box-office attraction on the screen in 1936.

Jane, called Angel, is the daughter of a mystery story writer and niece of a newspaper publisher. She talks like a detective story gangster and gets into a lot of trouble.

Robert Kent is a young newspaperman, Sally Blane is a screen star come back to the old home town, Harold Huber is a racketeer who takes advantage of a publicity gag to kidnap the actress. Jane engineers the capture of the gangsters and patches up the romance of the reporter and actress, and there you have it. But you don't have it until after a series of gag scenes which are so corny that they are very amusing.

"Shall We Dance"

Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Eric Blore, Edward Everett Horton. Music by the Gershwins. Recommended. RKO-Radio.

Going to a Fred Astaire-Ginger Rogers picture is something like going to a circus. You know what you are going to see, and you know that you are going to like what you see to almost exactly the same extent that you liked it the last time.

At a circus there are clowns, horses, elephants, trained seals, peanuts and aerialists doing death-defying feats. In an Astaire-Rogers picture are intriguing dances, some songs, a pleasantly frothy atmosphere and a couple of comedians who steal a lot of scenes and make life seem very amusing.

"Shall We Dance" follows the accustomed formula, differing from its predecessors in detail but not in quality or quantity. It is light, clever, ingratiating entertainment. The comedians this time are Eric Blore—as usual—and Edward Everett Horton. They are both very funny, with Glore doing a police station scene which is one of the high spots of the picture.

Another very high spot is a ballet sequence with Astaire and Harriet Hoctor, who used to be billed in Ziegfeld shows as "The American Pavlowa."

Astaire, a Russian ballet dancer from Philadelphia, sees Ginger, an American tap dancer, in Paris. He wants to meet her and marry her. When they go to America on the same boat, the rumor gets out that they are married, although Ginger actually will have none of him. Her resistance, plus the efforts of Ketti Gallian to get Astaire, keep the story going for two hours, and then everything turns out right with a wedding at Jersey City.

The slight story material is neatly handled to hold together the gags, music and dancing. Astaire's major dancing contribution is a number down in the engine room of the ship, to the accompaniment of mechanical sounds and a ditty called "Slap That Bass." Astaire and Miss Rogers do an interesting novelty dance on roller skates, and then there is the Hoctor ballet, a lovely bit of staging and performance.

The music, by George and Ira Gershwin, includes the already popular "Shall We Dance," two very tuneful numbers, "Let's Call the Whole Thing Off" and "They Can't Take That Away From Me;" "I've Got Beginner's Luck" and "They All Laughed."

Like the other Astaire-Rogers films, "Shall We Dance" has spectacular and beautiful settings and exceptional photography. Mark Sandrich directed, his fourth picture with these stars.

"Make Way for Tomorrow."

Victor Moore and Beulah Bondi in a remarkable combination of whimsy and pathos. Recommended. Paramount.

Occasionally Hollywood turns out a motion picture which is so much a director's masterpiece that the ordinary elements on which a reviewer might harp are almost beside the point. Compared to such a work, the usual picture is like a child's structure of bright blocks compared to an architect's achievement in steel and stone. The blocks are pretty, but they can be kicked over easily; the architect's results are beautiful and solid.

"Make Way for Tomorrow" is such a director's masterpiece. Taken from Josephine Lawrence's novel "The Years Are So Long," it has been made an achievement by Leo McCarey, who produced and directed the picture. McCarey is the man who made "Ruggles of Red Gap," with which he filled the world with lumpy throats when he had Charles Laughton declaim the Gettysburg address.

In "Make Way for Tomorrow," McCarey has taken a story of an old couple who, after 50 years of marriage, are being shunted around by sons and daughters who don't want them, and has given the story that same beautiful balance of humor and pathos which distinguished "Ruggles of Red Gap." The result is a picture which will make 95 per cent of those who see it laugh through tears from beginning to end.

Giving McCarey credit should not detract from the performances, from Miss Lawrence's story or from Vina Delmar's screen play. Victor Moore and Beulah Bondi are superb as the old couple. The story has depth and the play provides excellent drama and dialog. But McCarey is the master who puts these things together.

The greatest sequence in the picture shows the old couple returning to the hotel at which they had spent their honeymoon. The children are about to send him to California and to put her in an old ladies' home. They go on a last fling together, their first real celebration since their wedding trip. In the midst of the celebration Moore calls his children and tells them what he thinks of them. Most of this scene is done in pantomime, with the camera outside the telephone booth.

In another great scene Miss Bondi has a long telephone conversation with Moore. Judging by the fact that Luise Rainer got an Academy award for a telephone scene. Miss Bondi should get at least four awards.

Brilliant in the roles of children or children-in-law are Thomas Mitchell (the plumber in "Lost Horizon"), Fay Bainter, Porter Hall, Elizabeth Risdon, Minna Gombell, Ray Mayer and Ralph Remley. Keeping the sons and daughters from being heavies required delicate handling. Yet they emerge not unsympathetic; it is just that they have their problems, and the addition of a father and mother who cannot support themselves is too much to cope with.

Maurice Moscovitch, who played the father in "Winterset," gives an outstanding portrayal as Moore's best friend, and Barbara Read (one of the "Three Smart Girls") is notable as a granddaughter.

"Make Way for Tomorrow" is the most human, entertaining and moving picture since the last blue moon.

Recent pictures which have been reviewed and recommended in Screen & Radio Weekly are as follows: "Penrod and Sam" (Warner Brothers); "Fire Over England" (London Film-United Artists); "The Good Earth" (M.-G.-M.); "Ready, Willing and Able" (Warner Brothers); "On the Avenue" (Twentieth Century-Fox); "The Last of Mrs. Cheyney" (M.-G.-M.); "Love Is News" (Twentieth Century-Fox); "Lost Horizon" (Columbia); "The King and the Chorus Girl" (Warner Brothers); "Maytime" (M.-G.-M.); "Call It a Day" (Warner Brothers); "Quality Street" (R.-K.-O.-Radio); "Swing High, Swing Low" (Paramount); "Seventh Heaven" "Twentieth Century-Fox); Captains Courageous" (M.-G.-M.); "Waikiki Wedding" (Paramount); "The Prince and the Pauper" (Warner Brothers); "Wake Up and Live" (Twentieth Century-Fox).

playing strength. By the simple process of elimination then three diamonds remains North's only good bid in response to one spade.

It is true that with this particular hand, clairvoyance would be required by one or both partners in order to reach the slam contract that would be a virtual laydown. But this is a "result" observation and does not alter the fact that three diamonds is the one proper response on North's hand. In this case, of course, South could do no more than answer with three no-trump and later pass to North's four spade bid. If South had held any one of countless other hands, however, the three diamond bid would have been the only key to full success.

The Gold Brick Salesman Can Skip Hollywood

By John B. Merriman

THEY may not be from Edinburgh but a few of these movie stars are as canny as any Scotchman.

Perhaps they can't pull rabbits out of hats but they can make the buffalo on a nickel change into an eagle on a four-bit piece.

If they ever lose their jobs in the movies, they can retire to the quiet of a brokerage office and weary their eyes over ticker tape.

Adolphe Menjou, who started milking cows on Vincent Astor's estate and who knows how elusive a dollar may be at times, is probably the shrewdest of the movie crowd when it comes to fingering gilt-edge securities.

Menjou became something of a phenomenon in Hollywood—a miracle man at whom other stars gazed in amazement—when he emerged from that black autumn of 1929 without losing a cent. While most of Hollywood's movie luminaries were crying over their losses—and this time without the help of any chemical tears—Menjou was strolling through his scenes with the nonchalance that has made his name famous.

The market bulls hadn't fooled him. When the ticker tape couldn't keep up with the suckers, he shrewdly figured that a day of reckoning was at hand, and several months before the crash he converted his stocks into cash and bonds.

FOR more than a decade now Menjou has operated his own statistical research department at a cost of $10,000 a year. His own experts analyze every stock on the market, and keep a detailed history from the time the shares were first put up. These statisticians keep Menjou well supplied with charts showing how each stock has risen or fallen over the last few years—and, what is more important to this master of suavity, whether the companies have kept up the dividend payments.

As a result of such research, Menjou has made few losing investments since he first rose to fame with Charlie Chaplin in "A Woman of Paris." He has conserved most of the salary that was paid him in the old silent days, and still saves a large portion of his weekly pay checks, even though most of it goes back to the Government in taxes.

And Menjou is rattling off his machine-gun English into a sound mike more now than ever before. After such hits as "Sing, Baby, Sing" and "One in a Million," he went into "Cafe Metropole" with Loretta Young and Tyrone Power, at Twentieth Century-Fox, where he is under contract.

In marked contrast to his own life, Menjou plays in this picture the role of a gambler who at last loses heavily. In real life, Menjou never loses, simply because he doesn't believe in gambling.

"To speculate on the stock market is to take more chances than if you gambled your money on poker," he said. "I never invest a cent of money in hope that a stock will take a sudden rise. I invest for the dividend earnings, and nothing else. If the company is sound and dividends are paid regularly, the stock will at least hold its own over a period of time, and probably will increase in value."

By buying stocks of large corporations when they struck the low ebbs of 1931 and 1932, Menjou has profited heavily in recent years. Brokers estimate that he has probably made as much money by the rise of the market as he has as one of moviedom's highly paid actors.

MENJOU is closely rivaled by Ned Sparks, whose dead-pan comedy belies his intuitive sense of how to make money make money for him.

Besides holding a sort of fame in the movie capital because his dog sleeps in the same room with him, on a regular bed furnished with mattresses and springs, the sad-faced Sparks is renowned for his business acumen.

Adolphe Menjou: The man who didn't lose a cent in 1929.

No one on the movie sound stages ever suspected that Sparks was a broker until he gave the director, the actors, the cameramen and the prop men on the "One in a Million" set a market tip.

To the horror of Sparks, they laughed at him. Hadn't they been laughing at him for years? Hadn't they been given tips before, mostly on horses that trailed the field?

Several weeks later, these same merry-makers were groaning. The stock had gone up eight points. They could have made a fortune.

Sparks commutes to the sets from a brokerage office of his own which he operates in a Los Angeles office building. When he isn't on the studio lots, he's reading the tape—and even when he is at the movie plants, he's usually holding a telephone receiver in one hand and getting reports on the market.

"I need something to relieve the sadness of life," Sparks commented in his usual dirgeful voice. "Stocks are more amusing than Hollywood movies. The ticker tape keeps some excitement brewing."

While the mournful comedian may believe his business is "amusing," there are a hundred stars in filmland who think that it approaches the colossal.

Although he is willing to take more chances than Menjou, Sparks also shies away from speculation. He conducts his own investigations.

"If I want to risk several thousand dollars in a business, I hop in a plane or take a train to the company's plant," he said. "At least, that gives me the satisfaction of knowing that the company is operating."

A CANADIAN by birth, Sparks believes in keeping some of his money invested in Ottawa or Toronto properties which he personally knows are good bets.

Not by any means are all of Hollywood's shrewd financiers men. Quite a few of the glamorous actresses, who look on the screen as though they were made for love and gayety but not for the worries of high finance drive hard, sharp bargains.

There is the queen of the ice skates, Sonja Henie, who can invest $400 in an exhibition and gross a return of $20,000. That is exactly what she did in Los Angeles before she convinced Twentieth Century-Fox that she was worth $100,000 a picture. Ever since she quit winning Olympic medals, she has been promoting exhibitions without the help of a manager or agent. As feminine and demure in her business deals as she is in the movies, she nevertheless knows what she wants and how to get it.

Simone Simon, thriftily French, doesn't spend more than $600 a month, they say.

Not yet 23, she has already earned more than a half million dollars, most of which is invested in property.

"I think I work hard and save my money, and then I have something to spend when I'm older," said Miss Henie. She believes in living simply and economically.

AS THRIFTY as all village French are, Simone Simon scrutinizes her monthly expenses which seldom total more than $600, including $150 for a home, as compared with the $2,000 or $3,000 monthly that the usual star of her ranking spends.

Government bonds that draw 3 per cent interest appeal to Simone and she has never invested a cent in any other proposition. She is proud of her savings and of the way she manages the money.

Another who lives a quiet life and shuns extravagance is Claudette Colbert. Before going into any picture, she attempts to judge exactly what she is worth to that film, in comparison with the other players in it and the production costs, and then she sets her price. That is the price the studio pays or else the producers can hunt for another actress. She has never been known to retrench.

Like Simone, she is skeptical of all investments except government bonds and she converts her cash into bonds as fast as she gets the pay checks. She dislikes parties and wastes little money on them.

Greta Garbo invests her money usually in Swedish banks or Swedish properties, such as apartment houses, and is reputed to have more than a million set aside for the day of her retirement to private life. Janet Gaynor, who is also in the million-dollar class, handles her own money, dividing it between bonds and stocks.

Of all the actresses of Hollywood, though, none ever invested more wisely than Ruth Roland, whose nearness to death in a hundred serials used to thrill millions. Although she lived in an era when fabulous salaries weren't paid to the stars, she cannily bought real estate that jumped many times in value. Her property along Wilshire Boulevard in Los Angeles, purchased when the street was flanked by open country, is estimated by bankers to be worth three millions.

HAS JUSTICE TRIUMPHED?

lated. "Then she said: 'Well, Hattie Bell killed her husband and got away with it, and I'm going to kill Furman and get away with it."

George Hammond, colored, said that two weeks before Godwin's death the defendant told him she intended killing her husband.

"Aunt" Nettie Seaberry, 70-year-old Indian woman, who giggled almost continually while she was on the stand, narrated an incident which happened three days before the shooting. Mrs. Godwin had come to her home, she said, and found her husband there, paying off farm hands. Mrs. Godwin had ordered him to go home; instead he had fled around the corner of the house. The witness swore she saw a pistol in the defendant's hand, and that she heard her threaten to shoot Godwin.

The aged woman's niece, Meta Maynor, and James Leake, a colored youth, corroborated her testimony.

Next to take the stand was the star witness for the prosecution—John L. Faircloth, whose own home was only about 150 yards from the scene.

He testified that he had been sick in bed at the time and that he looked out the window as soon as the shooting began. He insisted that there had been not two volleys of shots, but three.

"Between the second and last volleys," he said, "I heard a man's voice pleading, 'For God's sake, don't kill me! Let me live!' It was another two minutes before I heard more shots, not as loud as the others."

Faircloth said that between the first and last volleys he saw a stout woman, said by the prosecution to be Mrs. Albert Pope, leave the Godwin home, get into a car and drive away.

Doctors Say Victim Was in Crouched Position.

The witness' testimony was corroborated by his wife and three more colored witnesses, Alberta Leake, James Spearman and Willie Spearman, all of whom stated that they had heard shots fired in the manner he had described.

Three witnesses, Wilbur Strickland, Walter Smith and S. L. Tart, testified that Mrs. Godwin had admitted the slaying to them while she was a patient at the hospital.

Drs. J. W. O'Dell and C. L. Corbett, who performed the autopsy, said that in their opinion Godwin was in a crouched position when shot, or else his assailant had been standing on a much higher level. (The state's contention was that the defendant began shooting as Godwin opened the door to enter the house.)

Five bullets had entered Godwin's body, the physicians stated, and each shot ranged downward. There were three wounds in the abdomen, three on his left hand and arm and two on his right hand. Apparently the victim had been holding his left hand against his body, said the witnesses, for the bullet wounds on the hand corresponded with the wounds in the abdomen.

With this testimony the state rested. Charles Ross, of defense counsel, mad the usual motion for a non-suit, which Judge Cranmer denied.

After A. W. Bizzelle, a surveyor of Newton Grove, had described surroundings at the Godwin home, illustrating his text with drawings, plump Mrs. Albert Pope took the stand. The crowded courtroom hung on every word as she opened the battle to save her relative from the unpleasantness of imprisonment.

Mrs. Pope insisted that it had been a duel, with the life of Sina or her husband at stake.

"Mrs. Godwin was on the back porch when Mr. Godwin drove up and got out of his car," she said. "He jerked open the door and started shooting. After he had shot once or twoce, he went inside."

By this time, she said, Mrs. Godwin had her own pistol drawn.

"What was she doing?" Attorney Ross inquired.

"She was shooting, too. Mr. Godwin would come out from behind the corner of the porch and shoot, and then go back. Then he would come out and shoot some more."

The battle continued, she said, until both had emptied their guns. Then Mrs. Godwin came down the back steps, walked a few paces to a bench and sat down. Godwin followed, falling in the yard. He died within a few minutes, without saying a word.

In his cross-examination, Cannady tried to make the witness admit that Godwin was killed while unarmed and in cold blood, and that the pistol was placed beside the body to make the duel story look good.

"I'll ask you," hes aid, "if you didn't help stretch out Furman Godwin's body and if you did not make the mistake of putting the pistol on his left side instead of his right?"

"I never got closer to him than the steps," she replied.

She was asked if she had not broken up the home of a man identified as "Mr. Wade," and thereby become the topic of neighborhood gossip. She replied, "No. I never went with him."

Shortly after she left the stand, Cannady drew from a defense witness, Ralph Hanna, that Mrs. Pope had told a different story when she testified before the coroner's jury. Hanna, who had been a member of the jury, said that she had declared she covered her face with her hands as soon as the shooting started, and saw nothing of what occurred afterward.

Dr. Charles Highsmith, of Dunn, testified that he answered the call to the Godwin home, and found Mrs. Godwin in a state of nervous compulsion and shock. He thought her wounds were serious and sent her to the hospital.

Dr. J. F. Highsmith Jr., the next witness, insisted that when Mrs. Godwin reached the hospital her temperature and pulse were normal, and that she was not nervous. Her wounds were superficial, he said, and she could have left the hospital a week sooner, had she desired. (The state held she remained at the hospital longer than necessary as part of her deception.)

Mrs. J. C. Pope, 65-year-old mother of the defendant, told her version to the jury on Wednesday, November 25th. She underwent questioning and cross-examination for two hours while she stuck to the duel story, gesticulating vigorously during the more exciting moments.

She admitted Mrs. Godwin went into the field and talked to several workers, but insisted that she did not have a gun.

Judge Cranmer asked, "From where did Mrs. Godwin get her pistol?"

Mrs. Pope shouted back, "Well, that's up to her to know."

She said that she did not see her daughter with a gun until after the shooting.

Cannady gained an admission that she had known Sina and Godwin had gone together before their marriage and while the second husband was living in the asylum. He pressed the witness about the relationship, asking questions which insinuated improper conduct by the defendant.

Silas Alphin, filling station operator of Dunn, gave important testimony for the defense. He said that Godwin told him, not long before his death, that he was in financial difficulties and was going to kill his wife if she didn't sign a note for him. Alphin asserted that Godwin had been drinking the day of his death.

Prosecutor Salmon, on cross-examination, extracted an admission that Mrs. Godwin had told the witness she shot her husband in the leg earlier in the year. Alphin denied that he had visited witnesses and "tried to bribe them," that the accused woman had been to see him almost every day about the case, and that he had helped her prepare her defense.

He also denied that Mrs. Godwin had laughed at her husband's alleged threat to kill her.

Salmon charged that the wife had once painted an appendicitis scar with mercurochrome, then gone to the police and asked that Godwin be arrested for assaulting her with a knife. According to the prosecutor, the police had laughed at her.

Alphin denied that he knew about this incident. He further denied knowing that the police had found Godwin wandering in the woods in his underwear.

"You knew that he begged the police to keep him in jail for protection against her, didn't you?" Salmon demanded.

"I heard about it," the witness replied, "but I didn't know."

C. J. Hanna, the next witness, testified that "as far as I know Alphin's character is good."

Hortence Pope Jackson backed up the defense assertions that Godwin had on several occasions assaulted and threatened her mother. She testified that on the Saturday before the shooting Godwin came home drunk with a pistol and a knife in his hands and attempted to attack her mother with the knife.

The girl said she jumped between them and sustained a slight cut on her hand.

"Almost every morning when I left for school," she said, "Mr. Godwin would tell me to say good-by to my mother because he was going to kill her."

During cross-examination the pretty brunette raised her voice and yelled her answers at her questioner in almost as loud a tone as he was using.

Charge Mother Sent Her Away for a Purpose.

She testified that, on the Sunday before the tragedy, her stepfather drove her to Smithfield to visit a friend. Salmon suggested that her mother had deliberately sent her from home so she would not be there to see the murder. The witness indignantly denied that this had happened.

"I ask you," shouted the cross-examiner, "if you didn't know that your mother went to the home of J. C. Pope for the purpose of carrying Mrs. J. C. Pope and Mrs. Albert Pope there for the purpose of witnessing the shooting."

"Not that I know of," she replied.

Police Officer O. R. Pearce corroborated the girl's testimony concerning the assault on her mother by her stepfather.

Miss Blanche Grantham, Dunn school teacher, Mrs. R. A. Duncan and Mrs. Sam Broughton, Sunday school teachers, all testified that Hortence Jackson was a girl of excellent character.

At this point the defense rested, and Cannady called several rebuttal witnesses.

J. K. Bannermann, state highway patrolman, said that he had accompanied officers from Dunn to the Godwin home on the night when the defense charged Godwin assaulted his wife. He said that Mrs. Godwin exhibited an appendicitis scar and said she had been cut by her husband. Bannerman also declared that Hortence had not showed the officers a cut on her hand and had made no complaints.

On the day of the shooting, Bannerman continued, he had visited the scene, and had been called into the Faircloth home, where he had heard about the three separate volleys of shots, and about Mrs. Albert Pope getting out of the car between volleys.

Funeral Director Tells of His Finds.

Dr. O'Dell, recalled by the state, said that in his opinion the wounds Mrs. Godwin sustained could have been self-inflicted. (The defense had tried to prove she could not possibly have shot herself.)

Then the defense recalled R. L. Cromartie, the funeral director, who said that in searching Godwin's clothing after the tragedy he had found a knife and several pistol bullets, apparently .32 caliber. On cross-examination, the prosecution attempted to prove that Mrs. Godwin had planted these articles on the body.

In the closing arguments the defense attorneys asserted that the defendant could not have shot herself, stressed the testimony of the daughter, and pointed out that there had been only two real eyewitnesses, both of whom agreed that Godwin had been the aggressor.

Solicitor Cannady charged that "the crimson murderess," as he repeatedly described Mrs. Godwin, had deliberately planned the shooting, had carried her relatives to the scene for the purpose of being witnesses, and had shot her husband in cold blood. He said that Godwin never had a gun. He declared Mrs. Godwin had not been hurt when she followed her riddled husband into the yard and watched him die.

The chief prosecutor recited the excellent war record of Furman Godwin, repeated the testimony of witnesses who had said he was an expert marksman, and argued that if Godwin had fired only one

ROMANCE OF THE DEEP SEA IN TODAY'S WORLD MUSEUM

ALMOST every one is interested in the sea even though he has never seen it. But countless people travel across oceans every year seeing only waves and sky and never imagining what is below the surface.

If you like romance, just imagine that all the gold that was ever sunk from the day man first carried gold in a boat still lies somewhere on the floor of the sea. Gold is one metal that does not rust or tarnish. And who knows? Some day you, yourself, may be a deep sea diver walking among schools of brightly colored fish, clambering over hills and leaping canyons searching for some of this lost treasure. For remember, it is not lost. It is only in the vault of the sea, waiting for some one to find the right combination. But even if you do not dive for gold, you will find a new world of jungles and plains and strange animals, stranger than any on any land.

Not many people have walked upon the bottom of the sea. Pearl divers in Ceylon spend most of their lives diving for pearl oysters. These men are "skin divers," that is, they wear only a loin cloth. They take great gulps of air into their lungs, slip over the side of the boat and disappear. The best men can remain under water for two and three minutes and some go even beyond this. They must scramble madly around the bottom picking the oysters off the sea floor and loading them into wire baskets. The main idea is to get as many oysters as possible before they come up to breathe again. Thus they haven't much time to think how beautiful the scenery is down below. Pearl diving has been going on for ages, as we know, because ancient emperors had beautiful pearls. But it is only recently that men have been able to go down into the sea and remain for any length of time.

Discovery of Rubber Aids Exploration.

Back in the 18th century men were experimenting with weird types of diving barrels and tubes through which they could breathe air from the surface. You might think that a person could breathe through a long hose. But if you will try breathing through 60 feet of garden hose (be very careful there's no water in it when you try this) you will soon be out of breath. Just so, in water, a man with a 20-foot hose would soon wear himself out.

After rubber was discovered and hoses were made from it, men found they could pump air to greater depths and modern diving began.

Nowadays a simple type of helmet can be made from an oil tin with a glass plate in one side of it and a hose attached to the top. With the bottom cut away to fit over a man's shoulders he can descend to depths of 40 and even 50 feet. The real helmets for this diving, of course, are neatly made of heavier metal than an oil tin. Air is pumped into the helmet constantly from a row boat on the surface. And the air pressure keeps water below the diver's chin. He can look through the window in his helmet and walk about on the bottom in nothing but a pair of swimming trunks. Nowadays scientists are using this type of helmet for diving along shallow reefs, studying the fishes and the geography of the ocean bottom. Artists have even gone down in such helmets painting undersea scenes with oil paints on canvas, almost as they would on land. Photographs and many movies have been already taken undersea.

Brilliant Colors Undersea.

All such divers agree that the coloring and forms to be found on the seabottom are far more interesting than any found on land. But water exerts great pressure. For depths below 50 feet divers wear the regulation diving suits equipped with heavy helmets. The air pressure in the helmet must at all times be greater than the surrounding water pressure. A man breathes this "thick air" and the pressure is transmitted through his lungs to his blood. It is almost like pumping up an automobile tire.

At great depths a diver must be able to regulate the air in his helmet by valves which he can turn on and off. Even dropping off a ledge suddenly to sink to a depth 10 feet greater might mean disaster for him. In such a case he must immediately have more air to counteract the increased pressure. If the air supply is suddenly cut off the diver's body would be collapsed by the tons of water all around him just as a tire collapses when it is punctured.

For extreme depths which the regulation diving suit and helmet will not withstand, weird looking metal suits have been used. These, of course, are used only in salvaging valuables from sunken wrecks.

The diorama found in today's color comic section shows some of the life on the bottom of the sea. It is called "Treasure Hunters of the Sea" and shows a diver approaching an old wreck sunken off the West Indies. You will see in the foreground several varieties of tropical fish; in the background some sharks are after their supper, and the smaller fish are running to cover in an old wrecked ship and among fantastic coral formations.

But Oceans Depths Are Dark.

On the front of the diorama you will see two types of diving suits. This diorama is very colorful and when you have completed it and hold it up to a light bulb, you will see how the lighting effects can change along the sea bottom. Just so, there are different lighting effects on the real sea bottom in water 30 or 40 feet deep which is comparatively shallow for the sea. Of course, at great depths there is no color watever and no light except the tiny flocks of phosphorescent lights given off by deep sea fish.

The Hollywood Reporter

Let us be gay: Lovely ladies of Hollywood, including Ginger Rogers, June Lang, Nan Gray and others, who were escorted hither and yon by young Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt during his stay here, had their attention called the other day to an item from Palm Beach mentioning Eleanore Young as Vanderbilt's latest romantic interest. Miss Young is a Park Avenue debutante.

And friends of Bruce Cabot report that he is seriously interested in Elizabeth Whitney, while Arline Judge is on her way to Honolulu with her new spouse, Dan Topping, baseball magnate. If this keeps up, the moving picture boys and girls will all be married to outsiders, what with Henry Wilcoxon, Henry Fonda, Randolph Scott, Lyle Talbot, Fred Astaire, Gary Cooper, John Beal and others taking wives from social registers.

Palm Springs has been going quite gay lately. The end of the season is approaching and birthdays or anniversaries of any kind are used as the reason for parties, picnics, horse show balls and swimming meets.

Leslie Howard's birthday was celebrated recently when Jack Kriendler, of New York, Palm Beach and Palm Springs, put on a "whingding" with all the western trimmings. With cocktails and cowboy music at the William Gargan residence, the crowd loaded into hay trucks and toured the town, ending at the Rogers stables, where sizzling steaks were served. Many guests with the following from the film colony were present: Mr. and Mrs. Howard, Mr. and Mrs. Gargan, Frank Morgan, Robert Woolsey, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Bellamy and Mrs. Charles Farrell, Paul Lukas and Charlie Butterworth.

Madeline Carroll gave one of the season's smartest cocktail parties at the Victor Hugo in Beverly Hills, when she honored M. Annie Youssef Bey, Egyptian minister, and the 17-year-old King Sarouk, of Egypt, who was en route to Geneva.

Among her guests were noticed the Earl of Warwick, the Cedric Gibbonses (Dolores Del Rio), the Arthur Hornblows (Myrna Loy), Samuel Goldwyn, Douglas Fairbanks, David Selznick, the Phil Bergs (Leila Hyams), the Charles Boyers (Pat Paterson), Walter Wanger, Darryl Zanuck, the Fredric Marches (Florence Eldridge), Ernst Lubitsch, the Manuel del Campos (Mary Astor), Lewis Milestone, Jacques Duval, Robert Montgomery, Nigel Bruce, and Miriam Hopkins, Benita Hume, Constance Bennett, Simone Simon, Gloria Swanson, Loretta Young, Fay Wray, Paulette Goddard, Maureen O'Sullivan, Mona Maris, Sylvia Sydney.

Walter Connolly and Bette Davis both had birthdays with parties recently and Simone Simon has been having several guests for dinner parties through the spring months.

Alan Hale, gaily garbed in a loud check suit, sailor hat, white spats, diamond-horseshoe scarf and a watch fob of yellow gold in the shape of a horse's head, is in fine fettle since his return from abroad. His getup is for his role in Samuel Goldwyn's "Stella Dallas," where he was discovered back of the cameras waiting for a set to be changed.

Hale is one of the most interesting talkers in Hollywood. He has returned to his native heath, sold on Sweden. "Sweden is a civilized country," he said. "There is no unemployment; people are interested in what they are doing; they don't try to imitate the Joneses and they believe that happiness is the right of everyone. They actually have a good time and automatically respect the laws of their country. It is a joy to be alive where everything is so clean, clear and natural.

"They have about 1,500 moving picture theaters, every one of which is wired for sound. France, on the other hand, has about the same number, but more than 400 of them are still showing silent pictures."

Hale said that there is in France a spirit of bitterness which becomes apparent almost at once. "They resent practically everything," he said. "I'm sorry for France—she is so rimmed around with countries in which she has no faith and her tourist trade has fallen off so lamentably. She has been thrown back to the proverbial custom of grumbling and discontent."

While they were making the English picture in which Hale appears, they found they needed a sign for "Keep Off the Grass," as used in Germany. The German in charge of the research for these sequences laughed: "There are no such signs in Germany," he said. "People know better than to walk on the grass."

Will Justice Triumph?

shot at his wife he would have killed her.

Cannady said he did not ask a first degree murder verdict, but indicated that Justice would be cheated if the jury returned anything less than a second degree verdict.

The jury retired at 2:30 p. m., Thursday, November 26, and 45 minutes later Spokesman Vick Harrington announced:

"We find the defendant guilty of second degree murder. We recommend mercy, Your Honor."

The defendant wept for the first time as she heard the verdict. Her daughter put an arm around her and broke into loud sobs.

Mrs. Godwin's counsel made a plea for mercy, and the private prosecutors hired by the Godwin family joined in a recommendation for a sentence somewhat less than extreme.

"I have nothing in my heart but pity and sympathy for her," said Judge Cranmer. "I hope that what I will do for this unfortunate woman will meet the approval of a greater Court than this, a Court that makes no mistakes, and to whose judgment there is no appeal.

Had a Fair Trial Says Judge Cranmer.

"If I do what I am about to do to her in vengeance or with malice or ill-will in my heart, it will be measured out to me again with interest in the great Court of God, as it should be.

"This woman had a fair trial. With the aid of able counsel, she was convicted by a fair and honest jury. I order that she be committed to the State Penitentiary for a period of from 15 to 20 years."

As these words were spoken a number of spectators silently applauded.

But the defendant's counsel pleaded further, pointing out that, for the sake of Mrs. Godwin's young daughter, the Court should go a bit easier. Accordingly, Judge Cranmer made it 10 to 15 years, and then called for evidence bearing on the reputation of the convicted woman and her victim.

Court Clerk L. M. Chaffin told about the bigamy conviction, and others testified that Sina's character was "not so good," that she was known as a "gun-toter" with an evil temper. They said Godwin had borne a good reputation, with the exception of taking an occasional drink, and that he had been peaceful and home-loving.

Counsel Ross explained to the judge that his client's past record was only "youthful mistakes." He said the defense did not put her on the witness stand because she did not want her past brought before her daughter.

Sina Godwin's attorneys immediately filed notice of appeal and she was released in $5,000 bond. The appeal was argued on March 24th, but a decision is not expected for some time, probably several months.
